

Supplement to the "Markdale Standard," August 31st, 1882.

THE EASTERN CAMPAIGN

The results of the engagements of Thursday and Friday followed by the severe fighting of Saturday appear to have been more important than was first anticipated. If our men were roughly used the Egyptians were badly cut up and then rout was complete. The enemy fled in disorder, throwing away their arms and accoutrements. Sir Garnet Wolseley is determined to give the enemy no time to recover from his reserves. He will divide his force, leaving a brigade under General Graham to invest Arabi's stronghold at Tel-el-Kebir, and will himself advance with the main body of his army upon Cairo.

Priceville.

A sort of volcanic eruption taken place in a certain portion of our town lately and threatening the overthrow of blacksmith shops, private dwellings, picket fences, side walks, and various other property, the strangest feature of the affair is that the crater of this volcano should be a notorious "jar of preserves" which was thoughtlessly removed from its cool cellar home, and placed in such a high temperature during the summer of 1880 that violent fermentation has been going on ever since.
