Between Camberwell and Wandsworth the animal was met by a Midland train running from Victoria. The animal passed the train without injury, but was then followed, by a Chatham and Dover train. The bull again escaped, and in running from Victoriathe train came up with the infuriated beast at Walworth, and ran him close side by side. Getting nearer, the engine driver took out his coal hammer, and struck the animal a heavy blow, felling it instantly, it dropped under the wheels, and its tail was cut clean off. Eventually the bull was killed, after being on the line three hours.
