Dealing With Oriminals.

It is the unanimous testimony of those who administer our criminal laws that first coffenders seldom remain such but come up again and again until finally they become confirmed criminals. This fact has led many to question the wisdom of existing laws and to advocate the dealing with criminals in some such manner as will not leave the impression that society is revenging itself for the crime committed. It may be presumed that the desire to carry out this principle is responsible for the charge that has recently been introduced into the criminal laws of France: It is stated that a new law has just been premulgated under which certain first offenders are hereafter to be In order to ascertain the views of chemists throughout Great Britain as to which of the remedies for outward application had the largest sale and greatest popularity "The Chemist and Druggist" instituted a post card the proparation which had the largest sale and was the most popular withous tomers, and the publisher received 635 of these cards, with the following results: and save themselves from becoming habitual offenders, permanent members of the dangerous class. The French criminal courts are empowered by this law to postpone sentence for five years when those who have carned them are shown to be new to crime. If a the end of five years these monuments of mercy appear to have profited by it, to have committed no offence, the original sentence becomes void. Many will watch with in terest this experiment which gives such unusual prominence to the reformation idea of punishment.

which the husband considers sufficiently serious to warrant his prayer for release, has recently arisen between a luminary of the variety stage and her consort. Briefly stated the dispute between the man and woman is this: that he insists on her being known under his name, while she insists on his belingknown under hers. Whether this is a legitimate result of the emancipation of woman and of the fact that in all departments of effort women are coming to the front and are achieving equal success with men is a debatable question. And whether the demand on the part of distinguished women that, their husbands shall submit to the lew order is likely to increase it is difficult to foretell. It might be well, however, for the men who contemplate marrying women of this class to take the precaution of settling before the nuprials are solumized whose name shall flourish on the tomestic doorplate. Much trouble might thus be avoided and the future pea.
