LATE FOREIGN NEWS

Brussels is to have an elevated cable road.

Tasmania has discovered silver mines far richer than any in Australia.

The Amsterdam diamond cutters are deploring the restrictions upon the output of diamonds effected by the South African diamond trust.

St. Malo has an omnibus conductor who is a marquis; a count who earns his living by making mouse traps, and a bathing man whose title is Count Raoul de la Begasse Marquis de Chambery.

In a game of cards near Trenton, Texas, Charley Banks put up his pistol in lieu of chips. A dispute arose, and in the struggle for the pot the pistol went off, shooting Banks through the head.

Over the door of every house in the large village of Gojimura, Japan, is the motto, "Frugal in all things. Liquor prohibited." That town believes in local option, and as every one has joined the ranks of total abstainers no sprees of any sort can be bought in the place.

One result of the spread of the Mohammedan religion in Africa is to make tribes that formerly disposed of their captives by cannibalism save them and sell them for slaves.

A Baptist missionary in Burmah is proud to say that he numbers a Buddhist priest among his converts. He says he is convinced that a priest of the Buddhist faith abandons his religion. Twenty years ago a particular priest who cast off his yellow robe with a Christian name received a call to a contract from his former people, and instead of since his conversion, he has his severed robe, taken a wife, and settled down to a peaceful life, while preaching on Sundays.

The tyranny in Russia is growing more and more atrocious. Count Tolstoi, the novelist, and Count Ignatieff, the ex-minister, are now exiled to their estates. Prince Kropotkin, the well-known Nihilist, and Karakozoff, the would-be assassin of the Czar, and other leading prisoners, have had their property confiscated, and their families in Russia, and even in Switzerland, are persecuted. Many other ladies prominent in literature and society have taken alarm, and have left the country.

Robert Shaw of Dover, N.H., undertook to sleep in a hot room with a cold bed, and he awoke he was not sure. He did more sure. Todd more than a dozen times, and carried it away.

The superintendent of the Russian Imperial Agricultural Society at Moscow, Count Sheremetieff, will shortly arrive in England to purchase a number of the Shorthorn cattle belonging to Mr. Peel, of Drayton Manor, Staffordshire. The Count has been a liberal purchaser of Shorthorns for some years past, and has now a herd of 200 head, which he has collected at his estate at Kuskovo, near Moscow. The Count is also a large breeder of Merino sheep.

The reports that have been published from Russia to the effect that the Czarewitch would be published, from Russia to the effect that the Czarewitch would be published, from Russia to the effect that the Czarewitch would be published,