They are Now Heing Trained in France and Germany.

To one not proviously acquainted with the facts the amount of scientific study that has been devoted to the birds known as homing pigeons must appear surprising.
Thetruchouning pigeons are not identical with the ordinary carrier pigeons, but are almost all descendents of a specially trained and developed race of birds in Belgium, wherethey are called bassenger pigeons. they are called passenger pigeons, or travel-er pigeons—les pigeons voyageurs. These pigeons have been enrolled, so to speak, the the armies of Europe, of which they form really limportant members. A map recently published in La Nature shows the many pholished in La Matthe Shows the many lines of pigeon communication running from the frontier fortresses of France, Germany Ijaly, Spain, and Portugal to the capitals of tally, Spain, and rotting those countries.

Pigeons are kept trained to fly along these routes, and they could carry news of an invasion when all the telegraph lines and other ordinary means of communication ability of a pigeon to find its way home across many hundred inites of country is frequently ascribed to instinct. But Mr. W. B. Tegetmeyer, writing on this sub-lect in Nature, points, out that the theory is been entirely disproved by the piger rices that have taken place between Rome and Belgium. The distance is 800 or 9.0 miles. The pigeons used had been trained to lly from the south of France to Belgiun, but about half of the country lying betwee Rome and Belgium was unfamiliar to them fundreds were started from Rome, but only very lew got to their hombs in Belguin

a very lew got to their homes in Belguin, and they occupied from eleven-days to two weeks.

The explanation is that the lofty chain of the Alps cut off their wiew of the country facther north that was familiar to them, and so they were lost, only those which flew along the coast until they reached southern France being able to find their way.

When fog and mist conceal the face of the country the pigeons make very slow phygress. Under ordinarily favorable cilicianstances pigeons fly from southern France to Brussels, a dystance of about 500 mited, between sunrise and early evening. Thoir between sunrise and early evening. Their average rate of flight varies from twentyseven to forty-seven miles an hour. course they can fly much faster wind than against it. They do not ily after S o'clock in the evening.

Unto all those whose love was blest,
The fairest flowers he flung. Then I caught his garment's floating hom.
Muchuring bitterly:
King all the daylight is for them—
And has thou naught for me? An instant as I stayed him there He looked upon my face, Before his sarment's fold of air Melted from my embrace.

Then, swifter than a shadow files. He passed, and no flower fell— But his eyes were as my lost love's eyes. Looking he last farewell. -May Kendall Everybody's Garden.
