Everybody said he had an odd look about the first of the first and most family that he dised off odd plates and lived in an odd house. This house was the very essence of no particular style of architecture, but a mixture of everything in general. In looking at the house from an artistic distance, two ideas were presented to the mind of the spectator. The first and most familiar was that, in some awful convulsion of nature it the disjointed fragments of ancient and modern buildings had been thrown uptogether and, in the course of time, had become comented, and thus formed the uncouth many sion of my friend Campbell.

The second and most probable idea was, that the main part of the house had been built by the first owner of theel place, and thus forced the uncouth many up an addition, according to their particular caprice. At any rate, it had attracted Campbell's attention while on a hunting excursion among the hills, and the oddity of the structure, combined with its lovely situation, had induced him to purchase it.

The mangion inside was a veritable wonder. There were at least a hundred places where one could lose himself, even if one with a sum and set with his was asset with his was and severant introduc within through the city and din darkest and me introduc his the thirty darkest and me introduc his the through a small part of the look ing at the lought of the structure, combined with its lovely situation, had induced him to purchase it.

celt days the worth has ever seen. Every recurrence of the anniversary of Pentebost gives ample material for thought, and serves to emphasize the great lessons and revive the hopes with, which this day stands forever identified. The day of Pentecost was the first day of that glorious age, which has won for itself the name of the Apostolic Age. That age has never been fully understood. No words could exaggerate the wonderful work that followed immediately upon the descent of the Holy Ghost. The band of apostles was summoned by this sacred outpouring to a sublime mission. They little dreamed what glorious things the immediate future had to bring. That overy daysthe direct results of their preaching were such as to lay the foundation of unfaltering faith in the universal fitness of their message to men, the manifold needs COXY CORNERS.

There was ample room for all the books that a bookish boy had picked up in his whole life, and room for many more. Over the shelves hung pictures of kob's favorite authors—Holmes' and Longfellow's gental faces and Hawthore's handsome profile, all framed simply in oak. A really good otching of "Reading Homer" had the place of honor over the mantel. The mother had spared it from the parlor, because the boy liked it so well. The Day of Pentecost.

"When the day of Pentecost was fully come."—Acts ii., I.

Sometimes a day is so rich in events that it becomes the dawn of a new era, the inauguration of a new epoch. The day of Pentecost takes its place among the greatest days the world has ever seen. Every recurrence of the anniversary of Pentecost gives amule material for thought, and the weeds and briars overwholm him—because they can see no avenues from farm life to honor and distinction. It seems to them that over the gateway that leads to the poorly-paid drudgery of farm life it is written, "two enters here leaves hope behind." Some of them are in the high schools and colleges now—not to equip themselves, to make farm management more successful and profitable, but to escape from it. They have to looked the matter over, and concluded that the nion who have distinguished themselves in the professions, sciences, arts and states maintip were the boys who left the farm. They see larmers that have been elected to office advocating the methods of socialism that our country was founded, and that of the advocating the methods of socialism that are utterly subversive of the principles on which our country was founded, and that have destroyed liberty wherever tried, and they conclude, perhaps, that are life is unfavorable to clear thinking.

Now set those farmers boys to work on the horbarium for the institute. The control of "aching void" which they had supposed the farm could "never fill" is gone. You will see them digging into Gray's botany, learning to analyze plants, reaming the fields and forests to gather specimens, pressing fastening to analyze plants, reaming the fields and forests to gather specimens, pressing fastening to analyze plants, reaming the fields and forests to gather specimens, pressing fastening to analyze plants, reaming the fields and forests to gather specimens, pressing fastening to analyze plants, reaming the fields and forests to gather specimens, pressing fastening to analyze plants, reaming the fields and forests to gather specimens, pressing fastening to their work and the difficulties overcome. You are, thus, not only rooting out the weeds of ignorance and dissipation from the weeds of ignorance and dissipation from the firm minds and planting a tree of life instead, but you are binding their hearts back to the farm with a gord stronger than bands of steel.
