the burdlen of the war. The women work in the fields, encouragement being given for that purpose. When Hull's proclamation appeared it had its effect, there being security promised for private property, and the people would willingly have submitted, but when it was found that private property when it was found that private property was seized without compensation the public sentiment entirely changed. The success of Georal Brook established the general sentiment; he has since made the most of it, has become personally highly popular; in short, has taken every measure that a judicious officer will take in his circumstances for the security of the 'province. A determination new prevails among the people to defend the country."
