Too Much Ozone. It was February 22nd in the winter of honest Patrons as they faced down the "gravel" on that memorable morning. Their destination was. Flesherton Station; object, dark designs upon a barrel of salt at 12 below cost, Stopping for a few brief moments i the somnolent village of Flesherton to exchange "smiles" and instruct the enial Peter in the nebulous mysteries of the Patron "Grip," they journeyed onward to the Station. The whole afternoon and part of the evening was spent driving a condensed bargain for one lonely barrel of salt. The deal olosed; then followed the clasping of ands and a free interchange of dim. cabalistic signs, grips and ."smiles." then they set out for home the pale fading light of the new moon was lauguishing in the west. The stars were bright and gleaming in their erulean heights and the deep oppressive solitude of night pressed heavily upon our worthy friends while the horses jugged on, little dreaming of the ghastly fate awaiting them. All went well until they came within about a mile of home, r just where the southern, line of the xuriant Orange Valley becomes lost in the morasses of Beattie's swamp, when Billie, in consequence, no doubt, of having been unthinkingly riding with his nouth open had become filled with ozone which produced drowsiness and the god of morphons laid his mysterious and upon him, and he silently slipped arboard into a flecoy snow bank while e, whistling the protestant boys, drove as far as Mr. Burnett's before missing m. Then he pulled in to turn round d seek his companion but in turning capsized leaving the hind bob, box salt in the yard and clamored on he front bob, proceeded to search, as he upposed, but instead came up the gravel to the next side troad, turned in and proceeded as far as the railway rossing, then turned down the track owards Flesherton Station again, but had not gone far before a light approached in the distance, which Joe, who by this time was also much over come with ozone, took for a team with a lantern, and he faced the fast approach. ing light as bold as a Yankee and yelled like a Comanchec, "get off the road there you feller with the lantern." Just then the horses veered a little to one side and the engine of the night express struck one of them and the end of the pole killing the horse instantly and hoisting Joe high in the air landing him several yards over the fence in the snow.
