A COMEDY OF ERRORS

CHAPTER II.

The area attached to the house was not large, but it was well laid out, and the rooms were of a good size. Mr. Robinson had taken the house for the sake of his children, and he was determined that they should have plenty of room to play about in. Behind the house was a large garden, which was a perfect paradise to the children, and in front was a small plot of ground, which was carefully tended by Mrs. Robinson, who was very fond of flowers. Mr. Robinson was a widower, and his family consisted of two daughters and a son. Mary, the eldest, was a tall, handsome girl of seventeen, and Jessie, the youngest, was a child of eight. Between them was Frank, a boy of twelve, who was the pet of the household. Mr. Robinson was a merchant in the city, and was generally at his office by nine o'clock in the morning, returning home about six in the evening. He was a man of simple tastes, and was very fond of his children, who, in their turn, were very much attached to him. Mrs. Robinson was a kind, motherly woman, who devoted herself entirely to the comfort of her husband and children. She was a good housekeeper, and was very particular about the cooking, which was a matter of great importance to Mr. Robinson, who was a bit of a gourmand, and rather fond of his dinner. Mary was a great favourite with her father, and was generally to be found in the study when he was at home. She was very fond of reading, and had a great taste for music. Frank was a regular boy, and was always getting into scrapes, which caused his mother a great deal of anxiety. He was very fond of his sisters, and was a great favourite with them. Jessie was a quiet, thoughtful child, and was very much petted by her father and sister. Mrs. Robinson was very fond of her children, but she was not blind to their faults, and was always ready to point out to them when they were in the wrong. Mr. Robinson was very much pleased with his new house, and was delighted with the garden, which was a great improvement on the small yard at the back of their old house in Bloomsbury. Mrs. Robinson was also very much pleased with the change, as the children had been looking pale and ailing in London, and she thought the country air would do them good. Mary was very much pleased with the change, as she was very fond of flowers, and was always happy when she was in the garden. Frank was delighted with the change, as he was very fond of boating, and there was a river at the bottom of the garden. Jessie was pleased with the change, as she was very fond of her father, and was always happy when he was at home. Mr. Robinson was very much pleased with the change, as he was very fond of his children, and was always happy when he was at home. Mrs. Robinson was very much pleased with the change, as she was very fond of her husband, and was always happy when he was at home. Mary was very much pleased with the change, as she was very fond of her father, and was always happy when he was at home. Frank was very much pleased with the change, as he was very fond of his mother, and was always happy when he was at home. Jessie was very much pleased with the change, as she was very fond of her mother, and was always happy when she was at home. Mr. Robinson was very much pleased with the change, as he was very fond of his wife, and was always happy when she was at home. Mrs. Robinson was very much pleased with the change, as she was very fond of her children, and was always happy when they were at home. Mary was very much pleased with the change, as she was very fond of her brother, and was always happy when he was at home. Frank was very much pleased with the change, as he was very fond of his sister, and was always happy when she was at home. Jessie was very much pleased with the change, as she was very fond of her sister, and was always happy when she was at home. Mr. Robinson was very much pleased with the change, as he was very fond of his daughter, and was always happy when she was at home. Mrs. Robinson was very much pleased with the change, as she was very fond of her daughter, and was always happy when she was at home. Mary was very much pleased with the change, as she was very fond of her mother, and was always happy when she was at home. Frank was very much pleased with the change, as he was very fond of his father, and was always happy when he was at home. Jessie was very much pleased with the change, as she was very fond of her father, and was always happy when he was at home. Mr. Robinson was very much pleased with the change, as he was very fond of his son, and was always happy when he was at home. Mrs. Robinson was very much pleased with the change, as she was very fond of her son, and was always happy when he was at home. Mary was very much pleased with the change, as she was very fond of her brother, and was always happy when he was at home. Frank was very much pleased with the change, as he was very fond of his brother, and was always happy when he was at home. Jessie was very much pleased with the change, as she was very fond of her brother