BANK BURNED.—Mr. Wm. Fleisher of the Toronto line miles from Markdale had the misfortune of having his barn and contents burned on Saturday morning last. Mr. F. went out shortly before day light to feed his team and on his return prepared to attend to the threshing machine at his father-in-law's, and while getting feed in the barn the lantern exploded and immediately the whole place was a mass of flames. He fought the fire desperately and saved the stable which was only twelve feet distant. The barn was a frame and contained over 30 acres of good clean grain, which he was to have threshed this evening and that, also his father-in-law's horse, harness, rakes, fan mill, cutter, two sleighs and other implements. Mr. Fleisher's loss will be to him serious, he having only $400 of insurance on barn and contents. He had his hands severely burned, and his neck and back while fighting the flames.

THE GREAT DEMONSTRATION

ROYAL ALBERT HALL, LONDON, ENGLAND, 29th OCTOBER, 1895.

The longest and the most memorable in the English language, the motto was to be "Gather ye a roundel of manhood to the manhood of the nation." Every aisle and every seat was filled with those who were to take part. Within the seats rising tier after tier, all occupied, over ten thousand in all. Never was a more enthusiastic gathering.

From the incoming of the two great leaders to the closing moments of the varied program, the audience held but a single mind and impulse. Hereafter we were saved and hurried on our way, every English tongue and "foreign" tongue sang the impetus. The entrance of Mrs. Willard and Lady Henry Somerset, attended by a body of English total abstinence maidens, was the signal for wild enthusiasm. They were followed by representatives of various temperance societies.

As each delegation proceeded down the aisle bearing the white plaques and the slogan "Gather ye a roundel of manhood to the manhood of the nation." The keynote of the great convention was then struck by singing a temperance ode.

"Here we pledge ourselves anew. Not to touch the drunkard's drink." This theme was woven in every movement of the great dramatic pageant, and the keynote of the convention was then struck by singing a temperance ode.

countries in which the W. C. T. U. is organized to the national air played by the great organ and band. The enthusiasm was at white heat as the great chorus of one thousand voices joined in singing.

"All round the world the ribbon white as snow and the glorious light that shined."

To thousands people then sang in unison "Old Hundred" and repeated the Lord's Prayer led by the clear, resonant voice of the Dean of Hereford.

Into the brass filled pulpit, a winsome in dove tint standing among the choir, even to the highest point in that gallery was strained to hear words of welcome. "In congratulating you on the success of your mission, I am glad to see you here, and I am glad to see you here, and I am glad to see you here."

Miss Sterling's voice rang out in a sweet, tender song which was loudly applauded.

As a group of royal yacht marines in their uniforms, Miss Agnes Weston, the mother of the navy, gave one of her characteristic speeches. With apt illustrations drawn from a "Simon's" fore, "Not only Britons, but people of every free country, must not be allowed to drink." "Sign the pledge to-night."

A pretty scene was enacted as the children of the navy, temperance society, for faithful observance. "Three cheers were given for Miss Weston and Lady Henry Somerset."
