He shuddered as the gruesome shadows about him seemed to frame the sember outlines of a prison cell, the felon's dock the scaffold!

Then fright, deadly fear, impelled him to sudden, frantle action.

He dashed, from the room, out into the yard, into the stables. He hitched up a fast horse to a dose buggy. Then back he sped to the vault apartment. His victim lay as he had left him. He selzed him in his arms, bore him down a dark corridor, out into the garden, through the stable, and, placing the limp form in the bottom of the buggy evered it with a he chilanket.

The approach of a pedestrian sent him speeding on, however. For miles he traveled a cheerless highway.

Finally he made out a dismantled tructure standing back, from the road, it was a place familiar to him, a residence some years since devastated by free. Just the place! he ejaculated. "No one goes there. I'll hide the body in the cellur, it will never be discovered."
