It is remarkable what an army of pedlars exist and many of them acumulating wealth too. It is also as onishing how little the majority us know about the quality or value o goods and things in general. The mavity of the average pedlar too fre quently gets the better of us. An instance which recently came to ou knowledge will illustrate. A lady not a thousand miles from Markdale pur chased some lace from a semale pack pedlar for twenty-five cents a yard. It was represented as being genuine Irish lace, and was considered very chean a that price. A short time afterwards this same lady saw a roll of lace in one of our stores, which very much resembled what she had got from the Foreigner, and on enquiry found that it was exactly similar, furthermore the pack pedlar had purchased it from this same storekeeper paying therefor regular retail price, viz: nine cents a yard. The lady's sympathy for the poor wee man immediately dropped cent. She had nibbled just a little. Harkaway Public School.
