

Miss Caprice.

BY ST. GEORGE RATHBONE

"Whatever I thought, I was so glad to get away on any terms that I said nothing and when the next engagement took place found Sir Lionel very much in earnest.

"On this account, however, feeling sure that he was the cause of all the trouble, I have been disposed to give him up. You know how poor fellows profess to be in love with me, though I have had some reason to believe it is a fortunate thing in after life, my father unfortunately left me no heirs."

"Well, I'm in a position to be generous and though I cannot give him his methods, I can easily see how, in his despair, he might expect his honor. I have good reason to believe this is not the first time he has tried to play the hero."

"Lady Ruth looks surprised. 'How is that?' she asks. 'Thereupon John narrows his eyes, and looking at her from the bottom of the blue eyes, which were staring at her, she shows some indication of the thought of his impertinent life.'

"The joke of the whole thing lies in the fact that it was so much the world's idea of the 'woman' that she marks John, and this fact induces, both of them, to laugh."

"On the whole, they feel so happy that it is hard to bear a grudge against the veteran who has been baffled by fate."

"Lady Ruth cannot forget that Sir Lionel was more evidence of being in love with her, and a woman's apt to forgive even a fault in regard to her own heart, she almost always has given up in honor in the love of winning her favor."
