A BROKEN BETROTHAL

BY ALMA JEAN LIBBY
Author of "When Loveli Maiden Stoops to Folly," "Parted by Fate," etc.

CHAPTER I
Lay steady into every heart
Some truth in life: if the will of Heaven be done.

It was seven o'clock on a warm June evening. The twilight was deepening, and the hills and valleys of Southern Maryland lay in a soft haze of blue and gold. A young man, dressed in a simple, dark suit, stood on the porch of a small, white cottage, looking out over the landscape with a thoughtful expression. The name of the place was not known to him, but he had been told by a stranger that it was a beautiful spot, and he had come here to enjoy the solitude and the peace of the woods.

"What a beautiful scene," he murmured, his eyes fixed on the distant hills. The air was cool, and the stars were beginning to appear in the twilight sky. He had been told that the place was haunted, but he had not believed it. Now, however, he began to feel that there was something mysterious about the place. He had been told that a young man had died here, and that his spirit still lingered about the spot. He had not believed it, but now he felt that there was something wrong.

"Who is it?" he asked, looking towards the house. The door was open, and a young woman was sitting on the porch, looking towards him. She was dressed in a simple, dark dress, and she had a serious expression on her face. She was the only person he had seen since he had come to the place. She looked at him for a moment, then turned away, and he saw that she was crying. He had never seen her before, but he felt that he knew her. He had a feeling that he had known her in another life, and that he was here to see her again.

"Who are you?" he asked, as she turned away. She did not answer, but he saw that she was crying. He had never seen her before, but he felt that he knew her. He had a feeling that he had known her in another life, and that he was here to see her again. He had a feeling that he had known her in another life, and that he was here to see her again. He had a feeling that he had known her in another life, and that he was here to see her again.
