speaking hastily. When placed in a perplexing position before his students, he bowed his head and his great chest would heave and fall, without remaining silent. When his answer or question came it was wise and just. He well earned the sobriquet, "Mark the perfect man." A friend and student of an intense and sensitive temperament thought lightly of my frequent injunction to "breathe deeply" when there was necessity for quiet self-control. She told me afterwards how happily she lighted the value of this advice.

Economic Charity. I had just seated myself at the table in the room of a down town dry goods store the other day when a well dressed man came in with three little children, two girls and a boy. Noticing curiously that the children were not dressed quite so well as the man who had charge of them, I wondered a little. I asked the man where he worked and he said that he was a porter in the building where I was seated.
