The following summary of the causes of the South African war is given by i the best we have seen in such short compass, and is all the more pleasing coming from across the line:

"Six principal points are involved in

"1. Taxation without representa-The British government de manded for British subjects that this should be rectified. The Boors finally made the concession that five years of residence and the oath of allegiance to ened with attack from the Zulus and the Boer republic should entitle an other powerful tribes. Britain could outlonder to vote, But this concession was placed under limitations which ractically nullified it. It was not an tories, so intervened, protected the onest offer. An Enterprising Firm Dark and awful is the scourge of war, but most of the world's liberties have been purchased by it. In awery real sense has the world thus risen on stepping stones of its dead self to higher things.

Britain is long suffering, but strong in her sense of right. The champion of the weak, she will not too far permit wrong. Her's the freest flag that floats.
