MARKDALE, MAY 30, 1901.

THE CELEBRATION

A complete failure—rain spoiled it all.

Mr. F. H. Clergue, of Sault Ste. Marie, has withdrawn from the directorate of the Cramp Ontario Steel Company, Limited, to be located shortly in Collingwood, claiming that some of the conditions under which he had associated himself had not been fulfilled.

In the house on Wednesday of last week there was some discussion on the bill to increase the sessional indemnity. Dr. Sprague suggested that more vigorous measures be taken to ensure a regular attendance of members. His remarks were ignored by the opposition leader, Mr. Porden. Col. Hughes thought a premium ought to be offered those who attended regularly, and listened to long-winded speeches.

Constituents are frequently disappointed in not hearing more of the new members they assisted in sending to Parliament. The following may clear up the situation, somewhat:—"Before the House rose Mr. McLaren of Huntingdon, one of the new Liberal members of the House, rose to explain why he and many other new members had been so silent during the session. He had kept track of the speeches delivered during the session, and the speakers. Fifty-five opposition members had talked and 59 government members, exclusive of Ministers. They had been 325 opposition speeches and 225 government speeches. One member of the House had been on his feet 94 times and another 57 times. He had counted no speech of less than five minutes. One opposition member had made 45 speeches, another 42, another 49; others 39, 31, 30, and 25. On the government side no one spoke often than 12 times. Mr. McLaren went on to say that if the old members hadn't been so loquacious the new members would have said more, and if the old members weren't so quick to rise the new members might have had a better show."

The following appeared in the Women's Memorial Number of the Toronto Star printed on Victoria Day and will awaken memories in the hearts of our older citizens:—"Away up the Owen Sound Road for fifty miles, then into the dense forest, the road not cut out, winding in and out among trees, and full of cradle holes, then through a beaver meadow, a spot of beauty, the great fur trees weighted down with the pure white snow, the stumps looking like iced cakes, with their crowns of whiteness. A brown squirrel darts across our path, and the tap, tap, of a beautiful, red-headed wood-pecker, is the only sound to break the stillness. Out of the beaver meadow again into the dense forest. We meet a solitary man in a cutter, and try to pass him—result, an upset, but we pick up our traps, and go on our way, cross a river on the ice, then in the thickest of the woods, see a white sign board, hanging from the branch of a mighty maple, and on it large letters, done with a burr stick shade of Dickens—"This is the village of Eden; best accommodation for man and beast." The village consisted of one log house, the refreshments were fat pork, dried apple pie and good salt rising bread. The goat horse was covered with a buffalo robe, and took his meal outside, as there was no stable; then on to the journey's end. It was dark the next day when we got out to the Owen Sound road—a zero night, and how delightful it was to go into a wayside house, and get toasted at a grand wood fire."
