Dowries on the Decline.

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: "Surrounded by more than a dozen of the disciples of John Alexander Dowie, who prayed and chanted hymns at the bedside, Mrs. H. W. Judd, wife of the land superintendent of Zion, died with her unborn child at No. 321 West Sixty-Fourth street Sunday afternoon. In the group of praying men and women there was no physician. Mrs. Judd died of an ailment that proper medical treatment could have cured, a victim of her faith in Dowie and his creed. With her went out the life of a babe that would have seen the light of day in a brief period had a doctor been called. The circumstances of the death have called forth an investigation by the police and a searching inquiry by the coroner. A post-mortem examination by the county physician has already been made and his opinion is on record that death was due to negligence. Before Mrs. Judd's death Dowie visited her and prayed and performed other rites peculiar to Zion. Mrs. Judd was noted for her beauty and was in robust health. She was the mother of three children. She became ill on Friday night. A trained nurse is competent to relieve such case, but only a disciple of Dowie and his husband were in the house. All day Saturday Mrs. Judd suffered, slowly but surely, bleaching to death. The elders of Zion and many women came and prayed for her. The head of the institution came with Overseer Spiecker and their supplications availed as little as the others. A brother of the dying woman begged that a physician be called, but Mr. Judd, backed by the praying band, refused the request. After hours of agonizing pain death came to the woman, and Dowie's followers said plans to keep the mutes secret. An undertaker was found who took the corpse away in the night, and the people in the house refused to give in quarters any information. But after the undertaker had prepared the body, Judd awoke to the fact that he was taking part in a punishable offence, so he notified the consumer, and the whole matter came within the pale of the law. The neighbors in the vicinity of Mrs. Judd's home were so incensed at the action of Dowie that they threatened to lynch him. Recent details of prominent elders of Zion tabernacle, and the sudden death of Mrs. Judd, have caused a panic among Dowie's disciples. It is noticeable that the followers of Dowie are not very aggressive at present and there is no doubt a few weeks will see the finish of this misguided sect. Some of Dowie's followers in Chicago repudiated him recently because he claimed to have in his possession the seal of God mentioned in Rev. VII-3, and said he was the fifth angel mentioned in the same chapter."

Saturday's Daily contained the following: "John Alexander Dowie, Overseer of the Christian Catholic Church, was arrested in Chicago on Friday pursuant to the action of the Coroners' jury, which has declared him 'criminally responsible' for the death of Emma Andy Judd, A. J. Worthington Judd, a disciple of Dowie, and the husband of the alleged victim, also was arrested. The evidence given at the inquest by some of the leading physicians of the city, who had examined Mrs. Judd's body, body after it was exhumed, was to the effect that the most simple surgical care would have prevented the woman's death."

On Wednesday of last week Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Montgomery, of Holland township, had a close call while driving to Markdale with horse and buggy. They were approaching the railway crossing on Caledonia road, between 9 and 10 o'clock a.m., and when within a few yards of the track a freight train came thundering along, without having blown their whistle. Had it not been for the good horse sense of the animal Mr. M. was driving, there would doubtless be a different tale to relate.

In the Heat of Time.

One evening last week Messrs. W. Hallert and C. Croys started out for a walk around the five-mile block, going by way of Chatsworth. When they got to Chatsworth corner it was growing late, and they decided to go only to the gate. When they were about to cross the bridge they were stopped by a double strand of strong binder twine, each end being firmly tied to the railings. They had scarcely got the twine cut and out of the way when a wheelman came down the hill towards town at a very fast rate. Had the twine been left tied on the bridge, the wheelman would have met with a serious, if not fatal accident. Whatever the person's motive was for setting the trap we cannot say, but it was a dastardly act.
