Simpson's Old London Resta To Be Torn Down Simpsonis a famous eating of London, that has been in ence since 1828, is doomed tinction. For years it has been resort of literary and musical brities who enjoyed the old fashion of English dinner served in output It is said that the restaurant be rebuilt with many improvement but old-timers fear that the name all that will remain. Hosts of men-ories are connected with this of and the reminiscences of it waiter, Flowerdew, a plating sque, snuff-taking person would gove a most interesting historical ecord of London during the larter of a century. Simpson's was on the Strand and vas old-fashioned in all its fitting nd furnishings. There were great ound mahogany tables, hairs upholstered in horsehair, and floor of colored tiles, with growing rees in tubs. Signs on the wall in ounced that a dinner "from the oint" would be served for two shill. ings and sixpence and a fish dinner or two shillings and ninepence, the atter a very popular meal with the public, being served from noon until 5.30 o'clock.

One side of the eating room di ided off into little private boxes surtained from brass rods. A huge dumbwaiter occupied the centre of he room and was always piled high with massive old glassware and siler. On the walls were painted anels of fish and game, grown dim with age, The bar opened into this room from a great window, and two high candelabra flanked it on either ide as though it were an altar. The old custom of serving the oasts was always preserved at impson's. Tables on wheels bear ng great joints of beef and mutton n silver covers were pushed about rom customer to customer, the arvers, dressed in white; cutting of he particular slices designated ho diner.

A woman's dining-room was upand here the picturesque lowerdew presided. Rooms for laying chess were on the upper while the "Knights of the lound Table" had a clubroom there with a collection of playbills and prints. Each week they dined in oldashioned English style from the his oric mahogany tables.

TURNS TO STONE.

There is a tree that grows in Mexco called the "chijol," of stone. ce. It is of chormous proportions, with in circumference and height. It has a number of branches spreading out widely and carrying leaves of a eilowish green color. The wood is extremely fine and easily worked in green state. It is not given to dither warping or splitting. cost remarkable thing about it is hat after being cut the wood gets gradually harder, and in the course a few years it is absolutely petriied, whether left in the open air or ouried in the ground. From this ciraber houses can be built that would in a few years become absontely preproof, and would last as though built of stone.
