TOBACCO TRADITIONS

The Value of Smoking in Epidemic Disease.

The belief that tobacco smoke is a disinfectant has long been popularly disinfectant has long been popularly As Over the Ciphan long ago as 1888 Dr. Paul Tas-sinari, of Pisa, subjected the germs of various deadly diseases (such as anthrax, cholera, and typhus (ever) to the action of dense clouds of imprisoned tobacco smoke during periods of 100 and 150 hours and he came to the conclusion that in most cases, and especially when large cigars had been employed as generators, the development of pathogenic bacteria was either partially or wholly arrested. But nobody retains smoke in his mouth for 100 hours at a time ! An occasion-5182,000,000 al pipe, indeed, scarcely counts comparison with Dr. Tassmani's intense soaking process. Besides un-same results as that of the right? distribution in the deposits same results as that of the cigar? Great Plague children were old to smoke in their schoolrooms. The idea was probably borrowed from the custom of the buriers of the dead on their way, in charge of leadcarts, to Holywell Mount. We read in "A Brief Abstract of the Virtues of the American Tobacco Plant" published in 1783, that at | first these persons only used tobacco as a deodorizer, little thinking that what they used for momentary relief would prove a constant preventive.
