Injurious Insects and Common Farm Pests and their Remedy.

Department of Agriculture Ottawa, May 28th, 1902. There is no subject of more importance to the farmer at the present moment than to be informed how to deal with his natural enemies, and to grapple with his annual and other foes in the most effective and economical manner.

Detailed treatment of the various interesting insects of special importance is precluded by want of space, but all that is really necessary is here given.

The clover root-borer is best remedied by a short rotation and the plowing down of infested fields as soon as there is a pretty good growth after the hay has been cut.

The best remedy for the green clover weevil is early cutting. Among roots and vegetables cabbage worms are a common enemy of the market gardener; but they can be exterminated by dusting with pyrethrum, (which is insect powder and lime), or some other dry diluting substance.

In turnip fields dust with one pound of Paris green mixed with 50 pounds of flour, land plaster, slaked lime, or any other equally dry powder.

For root magots of cabbages, cauliflowers, radishes and onions, many experiments have been tried with more or less success. On cauliflowers and cabbages Dr. James Fletcher, the Dominion Entomologist, has secured the best results by using the Gough tar-paper discs. For the other crops carbolic mixtures have proved of greatest success.

The best remedies for turnip aphid are spraying with kerosene emulsion or whale oil soap solution one pound in six gallons of water, at the time colonies first appear in August; also plowing down deeply the tops as soon as cut off from the roots, as eggs are found to be laid on these in large quantities.

The pear leaf blister mite can easily be kept down by the use of the lime, salt and sulphur spray used in winter, but it is difficult to exterminate, and will reappear if spraying be neglected.

For the mealy plum aphid spray with whale oil soap and quassa—one pound of soap to eight gallons of water. The red turnip beetle attacks turnips, radishes and the like, and the best remedy is to spray or dust the plants attacked with arsenical poisons in the same way as for the Colorado beetle.

For scab in potatoes soak the tubers either for two hours in a solution of eight ounces of commercial Formalin (Formaldehyde) in fifteen gallons of water, or for an hour and a half in a solution of two ounces of corrosive sublimate in sixteen gallons of water. When dry cut up for planting. Formalin has the advantage of being neither poisonous nor corrosive. Corrosive sublimate is a fatal poison if taken internally, and it also corrodes metals. The solution, should, therefore, be made in wooden or glazed vessels. All treated seed should be planted, and any solution left over should be poured into a hole in the ground.

For flea-beetle in potatoes mix four pounds of bluestone, four pounds of unslaked lime, four ounces of Paris green, and add to 40 gallons of water. Dissolve the copper sulphate, (by suspending it in a wooden or earthen vessel containing four or five or more gallons of water.) Stake the lime in another vessel. If the lime, when slaked, is lumpy or granular, it should be strained through coarse sacking or a fine sieve. Pour the copper sulphate solution into a barrel, or it may be dissolved in this in the first place, half fill the barrel with water, add the slaked lime, fill the barrel with water and stir thoroughly. It is then ready for use. A stock solution of copper sulphate and lime wash may be prepared and kept in separate covered barrels throughout the spraying season. The quantities of copper sulphate, lime and water, should be carefully noted.

The remedies for Hessian fly are late sowing the burning of all refuse, either during winter or before spring, plowing down the stubbles deeply as soon as possible after the crop is cut, so as to place the insects so deep beneath the earth that the delicate flies, when they emerge, cannot reach the surface; or to run a harrow over the fields as soon as the crop is cut, so as to start the volunteer crop from grain which has dropped in harvesting and induce a growth of wheat on the field sooner than otherwise would be the case; but when it is found that a young crop of fall wheat is only lightly infested, it is possible to stimulate the growth of the plants by a light application of nitrate of soda.

For the asparagus beetle spray with either kerosene emulsion or whale oil soap. The best remedies for checking the increase of wheat stem saw fly are the burning or plowing deeply of all stubbles, also burning stub straw as not used by the following spring, and summer following in June every other year.

The Badger's correspondent to the Shelburne Free Press says: The small-pox scare is dying away. Old residents here who have had the smallpox and seen several cases of the real disease, claim that the break-out is not small-pox at all, but some kind of skin disease or itch. It is said that the family in which it originated were the originators of an attack of itch that was prevalent here a few years ago. The scare will cost the Osprey council over $1,000 and consequently the ratepayers are very much displeased about it.

Letter from Corp. W. A. Bradley.

Cape Town, April 28th, 1902. DEAR FATHER AND MOTHER, I write to let you know I arrived in Cape Town on Saturday after thirty days sail. We had a lovely trip and beautiful weather. I expect we will go up country some day this week to join our regiment. They had some pretty hard fighting already, and several were killed. This place has not changed much since we were here before. There is quite a number of the soldiers ready to go home now. No one knows how long the war will last. I have not much news to write about this time. I will write again this week. For the mail box leaves for England every Wednesday. I wish to be remembered to Markdale and Orange Valley friends. Your loving son, Corp. W. A. Bradley.

BORN. Henry, in Markdale, the 6th inst. to Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Hester, aged.
