A SEPTENTIVE MONSTER

An latincible and Unconquered Fee of the Human Race.

A despatch from Chicago says

The evil of intoxication is a universal curse. Its long, slimy, twisting coils spread over every land and are visible in every walk of life. There is hardly a man or woman sitting before me who has not had and humanly helpless, degraded earthly existence of the drunkard. news is published that a man who has, filled high places in the service of his country, who bore a name honored in our history, has lost his life in a brawl in which he would not indulged in intoxicating drink. Solomon compared the sin of in-time poisonous serpents were everywhere. Every thicket was filled with a constellation of their gleaming eyes. Every desert was the home of the puff adder, lying half buried in the sand. Every swamp was the retreat of the water viper. Every hillside had for the traveller a warning hiss or rattle.
