The Power of the Press.

Miss Lillian Phelps, at a banquet given by the W. C. T. U., at St. Catharines to the scrutipeers and other workers at the referendum, told reason for a tirade of abuse. ago when her great uffele, the Mr. Phelps of that day, was building the Welland Canal, the men got so much money and unlimited whiskey for a day's work. Whiskey was then 25c. a gallon. Her great-uncle thought that where so much wiskey was needed, it would be more profitable for him to make it than to buy it. So he built a distillery and went to Buffalo—then only a large village-to buy the machinery to put in it. He stopped in a tavern, there were no 'hotels' in. those days, they were "taverus," and before he retired he picked the a newspaper, and read an article about the thought about it, and before morning he had made his resolution. He did not buy the fixings for his distillery. He came home and called the workman together. He told them that he had come to see the evils of drinking and the sin of drunkeness, and would give them a shilling a day more on their wages. And turned out into the "Twelve-mile-creek" the whiskey he had on hand! Miss Phelps was, with others, responding to the toast, "The Press," "and this," she said in conclusion, may be accepted as an illustration of the power of the press."
