Kouropatkin's command, and which will be largely increased by constant reinforcement.

Gen. Kouropatkin heretofore has handled every detail of the vast organization. The work is too much for one man, and he is now almost broken down under the strain. It is known that the Emperor is personally one of Kouropatkin's strong supporters, and it is thought the General will in all probability retain chief command of the two armies. Kouropatkin, however, has been seriously criticized by some of the Emperor's close military advisers, and it is possible that he may eventually be superseded.

THE CAME OF DEATH.

A despatch from London says :-The manner in which the Japanese commanders have sent their nien to death and the readiness of the Japanese troops to embark for that destination have been among the most striking features of the war in the Far East. Reckless disregard of human life has been the chief characteristic in Japan's fighting methods. While this has been built upon a structure of marvelous foresight, on what George Kennan has so aptly termed Japanese 'preagrangement,' and upon a most able system of military and naval strategy, both would
