He opened his remarks by a mercurial criticism of the school text-book on the subject in hand. He showed that the remarks found in the text-book were both inaccurate and incomplete. It developed that most of the teachers did not know where they were at, that with new books and new subjects, while one of the delegates intimated that there was no use asking the Minister for information, for that is one thing never handed out by the Department. Singing the National Anthem closed the session.

A Successful Convention held in the Public School Here on Thursday and Friday Last.

In spite of the unpleasant weather an unusually large attendance of the South Grey Teachers assembled in convention in the public school here on Thursday and Friday last. Of course it rained—that is traditional—and the Durham teachers had a taste of what the Markdale and other teachers from this part of the Inspectorate have had to drive through in past conventions.

Miss Forlor, in the absence of the President, occupied the chair, and though there was some difficulty on the part of the speakers to correctly address the chair, yet she was patient and made an excellent presiding officer. After routine business on Thursday afternoon, Mr. Wm. Armstrong, Chairman of the Markdale School Board, welcomed the visiting teachers in an exceedingly well-worded and timely address. The balance of the afternoon was devoted to the Vice-President's address, and an excellent paper on the Entrance paper in Arithmetic by Principal Cornwall of Meaford. Mr. Cornwall in this address as well as that one on Friday provided himself to be an up-to-date, enthusiastic teacher. His suggestions were well received and warmly applauded. During intermission hour the teachers paid a visit to the House of Refuge and were agreeably surprised at the beautiful home prepared for the homeless.

The evening's entertainment consisted of a recital by Prof. Conklin. His program was applauded time and again, and he sustains his reputation of being the best artist who has ever visited this town.

Friday forenoon was taken up by papers as follows, Mr. Brooks, "School Work and Diplomas," Miss Dale, "Foliteness in School," Miss Ina Beattie, "Literature as a Means of Culture," and Dr. L. G. Campbell on "Care of Children's Teeth." All the papers were excellent, particularly those of Miss Beattie and Miss Dale. Dr. Campbell gave a very instructive talk on the teeth and their care. Fall and Winter Millinery.

A Description of Some Dainty Hats and Trimmings.—Women's Artistic Ingenuity Exquisitely Displayed.

Twice a year—thank goodness not oftener, considering the matter from a reportorial standpoint, to say nothing of the feelings of the man who controls the money bags—at the spring and autumn millinery openings, the ladies hold undisputed sway (as if they would acknowledge the contrary at any time!) and the merchants and dealers vie with each other in catering to their desires in fashionable head-gear, as well as in other lines in which the ladies are particularly interested. Not many of the sterner sex dare to invade the precincts of the display rooms, but the STANDARD representative generally manages to find his way therein, though not without a certain amount of fear and trembling. He made his semi-annual visit during the week with the result given below.

The real novelty in the fall millinery lies in the colors and in the way they are combined. Colors are rich and bright but when used in the proper combinations they are toned down with beautiful effect. Burnt orange in all its shades will be popular. Brown, of course, holds a place as a leading foundation color with abundance of green also present. There appears to be a tendency for the tones to work into one another, as, for instance, a blending of greens and browns, or the new tangerine shaded into a pale tawean.

In shapes the large picture hats are much in evidence, though the small natty toques bid fair to become popular. Follage in different shades and textures of velvet will be much in evidence, and birds, wings and pompons still hold their place.

McFARLAND, STAFFORD & CO.

This store held their opening on Saturday last and Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week, when the showrooms were a very attractive spot and were visited by hosts of Markdale ladies. Miss Thompson, who is again in charge, with her efficient staff of assistants, welcomed the visitors. The room looked very pretty and the beauty of the hats on display received many admiring comments. Among the hats particularly noticed were the following:

A very pretty pattern was a blue tricorn shape with deep rolling brim, draped with blue plush, trimmed at side with mink and paradise osprey, and finished with a touch of coque de Roche and steel buckle.

A pretty design was a large black picture hat, envelope shape, faced with folded chiffon and chenille, the only trimming being black beads around the high crown, a jet buckle, and a large black ostrich fox-tail, fastened on the crown from the point of the brim.

Another pretty hat was a high-crown Gainsborough of castor velvet, shirred facing of pale blue velvet, cord of green and finished at the edge with a wide band of the castor velvet. The liberty crown was draped with wide liberty ribbon in corresponding shades and large soft rosettes on the left side, and on the right side a large shaded plume falling over the brim.

F. T. HILL & Co.'s

F. T. Hill & Co.'s show room was quite as handsomely decorated as in former years, and Miss Stein's display was well up to the excellent standard which she displayed in former seasons. The crowded condition of her parlor on opening days proved the appreciation of her customers as they gathered to inspect the many beautiful effects produced. Designs for children's wear are extensively shown here and in its way is as rich and attractive as the other displays. A few of Miss Stein's especially nice hats were:

A handsome black hat rolling off the face, the underbrim of shirred velvet; top, brim and crown of pleated taffeta rib and trimmed with one large ostrich plume and jet ornaments.

A very stylish hat of brown panne velvet, made on the "Vassar" shape; the underbrim and side crown shirred and top covered plain; trimmed with a beautiful "scream" ostrich plume and finished with touches of coque de Roche.

An extremely pretty hat was made of a rich dark red panne velvet with pipings of lighter shades and trimmed with a wreath of autumn foliage and handsome bird of paradise osprey drooping gracefully over the side.

Mrs. E. Braum's

Mrs. Sproule's handsome millinery department presented a very charming scene on opening days. The taste and originality displayed in the decorations were praiseworthy. The mirrors were tastefully draped. A cute idea, too, was a very cozy looking cozy corner. The decorating of the window was particularly nice. Many complimentary things were heard of the hats, and all in all Mrs. Sproule and her head-milliner, Miss Nettleton, have reason to feel elated at the success of their opening. Among the hats most admired we noted:

A beautiful Parisian picture hat was made of white panne plush. The shape was "Directoire," rolling slightly on both sides and having one of the high crowns so high in evidence. A deep binding finished the edge of brim while around the crown were four French folds all in purple panne velvet. A large bunch of rosettes of rose de brim plume, complete this charming design.

A much admired toque was of chinilla with coquille Roche trimmings. The facing was covered plain with a cording of the burnt orange velvet, the crown being artistically draped and caught in a dole box fast at the back with a large cut steel buckle. A long flowing plume of osprey in white and orange, falling gracefully on the hair, was the sole ornament.

Another decidedly lovely was a toque, the shape having an elongated point, of a more charming combination. The facing was of brown panne velvet, with a fringe of the entire top being made of tawean chiffon laid in single folds.

A beautiful paradise osprey in the tangerine shades was caught at side front with buckles of colored beads, while a cascade of soft liberty ribbon in the same shades came from centre of crown and extended down the back.
