

PAINFUL PERIODS

CANADIAN WOMEN FIND RELIEF
The Case of Ellen Walby Is One of Thousands of Cures Made by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

How many women realize that menstruation is the balance wheel of a woman's life, and while no woman is free from periodic suffering, it is not the plan of nature that women should suffer so severely?

Ellen Walby

Thousands of Canadian women, however, have found relief from all monthly suffering by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as it is the most thorough female regulator known to medical science. It cures the condition which causes so much discomfort and pain, and removes the terrors.

Ellen Walby, Wellington Hotel, Galt, Ont., writes:

"Your Vegetable Compound was recommended to me to take for the intense suffering which I endured every month and which had lasted for many years. I was relieved from the most painful pains prescribed, until, finally becoming disengaged with doctors and their medicine, I determined to try Lydia E. Pinkham's. I am glad that I did, as a short time I began to notice an incredible short space of time the flow was regular, natural and without pain. This seems too good to be true and I am indeed grateful and happy woman."

Women who are troubled with painful or irregular menstruation, should take your compound on general principles and her request to regain health and strength by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and then write to Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for further free advice. Thousands have been cured by doing so.

Weak Heart

Palpitation and irregular action of the heart are due largely to a thin, watery condition of the blood. The heart and nerves refuse to perform their proper work for want of support. Pale, weak, or anaemic people should use "PSYCHINE" and avoid heart troubles. "PSYCHINE" makes rich blood, tones the system, regulates the heart action and restores vitality. All weak people should have a bottle handy in case of sudden heart trouble.

Confession of Sin, a Duty.

A Discourse Delivered at the House of Refuge on August 27th by one of the Inmates.

Taking for his text Psalm 32: 5. "I acknowledged my sin unto thee, and mine iniquity have I not hid. I said I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord; and thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin." In the first verse of this Psalm the writer says: Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven; whose sin is covered; and in the words of the text he says, "I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord." Prominent among the conditions of forgiveness is the duty of confession; hence St. John says, if we confess our sins he is faithful and just to forgive us sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. Again, we are told every tongue should confess unto God. Not only in the new testament are we enjoined to confess our sins, but in the early pages of sacred history we read not only of confession but, also of peace offering and burned sacrifice being made in atonement for sin. Even among the Israelites before a trespass offering could be accepted the person bringing the sacrifice must confess that he had sinned. The purpose of the Lord is not only to remit the punishment for sin, but also to purge and purify the soul of the sinner, so that sinned should sin no more; and as that who found delight in evil should turn to hate it with all his heart. It is mercy and not vengeance in God that has made sorrow and suffering the inevitable consequences of sin. The state of sinfulness is a state of spiritual disorder; until this disorder is removed from our souls the reception of peace and joy, of light and love from the Lord is impossible. It must actually be removed from our soul before it can be spiritually well with us; just as a disorder must actually be removed from our body, before we can be pronounced physically sound and whole. In removing this disorder of sin, man's voluntary co-operation with the spirit of the Lord is necessary. The process of regenerating the soul, of bringing it into a state of order and harmony with the Lord cannot be accomplished without man's consent. It is the process whereby man is led by the Lord into the knowledge and hatred of all that is false and evil, and into the knowledge and love of all that is true and good. Therefore, it is necessary that a man should be able to discern sin in himself, to clearly perceive that he is a sinner; therefore, it is necessary that he should be able to see what a dreadful, hateful and lamentable thing sin really is. Only by such means can man be led to hate evil and choose good; to seek deliverance from evil and desire to grow in goodness; to come to the Lord, the good physician, to be cleansed of his spiritual disease and to be restored to spiritual health. He must grow weary of his old life of selfishness and sin before he will consent to loose it for the sake of that higher life which the Lord is ever ready and willing to bestow, even to the vilest sinner who sincerely repents. Because of these things confession of sin is enjoined. We must discern sin in ourselves before we can really confess it; we must desire to forsake sin before our confession can be anything more than mere lip service. When confession is genuine, there is a deep longing of the soul to be delivered from the danger of sin, and to attain to a consciousness of the divine favor. Mere lip-service in confession is of no avail; it cannot avail, because only those who really and truly see their own sinfulness, and inwardly desire as well as outwardly strive to shun evil as sin against God can ever attain a realized forgiveness. The souls of such lip servers are still closed, they cannot receive pardon and healing strength from the Lord; they are numbered among those of whom our Lord said, these people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, they honor me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me. True confession is heartfelt; it implies: 1st, Conviction of sin. The soul that becomes convicted of sin does not merely repeat the words of a set form of confession; it knows it has sinned, it discerns wherein it has sinned and come short of the glory of God; it perceives that sin has brought a dark cloud between itself and the Lord; it is just as conscious of having sinned as it is conscious that it is alive. 2nd, Humility because of sin. The soul that is humbled because of its sin becomes ashamed of itself. It is pained by the knowledge of its own weakness; its self-love, its pride and its confidence in its own strength is readily shattered to fragments; it has nothing to urge in extenuation for guilt; it can only cry, God be merciful to me a sinner. 3rd, Penitence for sin. When a soul becomes truly penitent for its sins, it desires to escape from its state of sinfulness, as well as from that state of wretchedness which sin has brought upon it. It approaches the mercy seat of God; mourning as well as humbled, craving pardoning grace; it confesses its unworthiness; it acknowledges that of itself it is nothing but evil. It comes to God as a little child to its father, seeking forgiveness, praying for strength so as to be enabled to go and sin no more. Of these inward feelings of conviction, humility and penitence, the soul can form in thought and find expression in words; they are thereby drawn out as well as intensified and confirmed. "Love that never outwardly manifests itself is but a cold and feeble affection; a thought that is never expressed is in danger of fading away from the mind. Hence the necessity of oral confession of our sins unto God. It perfects the perception of our state, it intensifies the feelings of all our wants, it develops the captivity of the soul. This oral confession is to be made to God alone, not to priests and ministers, not to any earthly mediator. "I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord," he alone is able to pardon, to him alone is confession due. When, however, we have sinned against a neighbor, it then becomes our duty to confess our fault to the person against whom we have sinned. This is what is meant by the Apostle, "Confess your faults one to another." The sin we have committed against a brother should be confessed to that brother. Sometimes this is a greater trial of our humility than confessing our sins unto God; nevertheless it is our duty. Even in other cases, though not a duty, it may be a relief to the soul to disclose its burden and its grief to a sympathizing and loving friend; yet our sin may be so great that it is better not to confess it to man at all. It may be that we committed some grievous sin, which for a time fills us with unspeakable pleasure and self-satisfaction. The pleasure is soon forgotten, our self-satisfaction has passed into oblivion; retrospective overwhelms us with bitter remorse; so deep is our guilt that we do not show it to man, it would blast our former good reputation, or perhaps sever the bonds of long and deep-rooted friendship. No, we dare not confess our guilt to man, though the secret consciousness of our sin may add a terrible additional weight to our burden; but what a depth of humility that soul must endure when it presents itself before God.

Confession of sin should not be merely vague and general, but also special. In ordinary cases general confession is both useful and necessary. For public worship in which many join, confession is necessarily made in general terms so as to suit the state of all. Yet, even in public worship each one for himself should give definiteness to the general confession, that is the words should remind each not only of the general effect of sin, but also of those particular sins of which he knows himself to be guilty. In our private devotions, in the confessions we make when alone with God, our special transgressions and shortcomings require special confession. We need to be convicted of our own sins, humbled because of those sins we have actually committed or desired to commit.

Confession in the true spirit of repentance opens the whole soul to God. It opens the heart, which in the act of confession mourns because of its weakness and folly in sin, it opens the mind in which mourning penitence takes form in thought, it opens the operative powers of the soul to receive pardon and healing strength from the giver of all good. This opening of the soul brings relief, as the experience and testimony of multitudes of Christians can prove. We may meditate long on our weakness and folly in sin, we may dwell on the aggravations of our guilt; we may feel our self-reproach until we both despise and hate ourselves, but the trouble often remains. The weight on the conscience is not often removed until the soul is brought to acknowledge its unholiness and to confess its transgressions unto the Lord. We cannot remove the dark cloud, do what we will, with as we may, for forgiveness can come only from the Lord. So long as the Psalmist kept silence he found no relief. In the third verse of this Psalm he says, "When I kept silence my bones waxed old through divine service on Sunday last was largely attended. Mr. Cronin delivered a forceful and most impressive discourse from Matt. 16: 30, 31.

Lachlan McDonald, aged 78, of Owen Sound, was received as an inmate of the Home on Monday, the 4th inst.

Mr. Harness was called to Tara on Tuesday last to attend the funeral of his cousin, Mr. W. Bowman, who met with his death by being thrown from his buggy, the horse, a spirited animal, having suddenly bolted and became unmanageable. His sister, who was with him in the buggy at the time, miraculously escaped uninjured. Mr. H. returned on Thursday evening.

Mrs. Kerr and child, of Owen Sound, spent Sunday with the Matron, and Miss Harness. Mr. Kerr called on his return from the Toronto Exhibition, and all returned to Owen Sound on the night train.

Divine service on Sunday was conducted by Mr. Harness, and he delivered an illustrative and very touching discourse from Matt. 24: 40.

"Watch, therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come."

There were a fair number of outside friends in attendance, the majority of whom were gentlemen.

This Medicine is Breathed.

That's why it is sure to cure Catarrh. You see it goes direct to the source of the disease—its healing vapor repairs the damaged cause by catarrhal inflammation. "Catarrhozone" always cures because it goes into those tiny cells and passages that ordinary remedies can't reach, goes where the disease actually is. Impossible for "Catarrhozone" to fail as any doctor will tell you. Don't be misled into thinking there is anything so good as Catarrhozone—use it, and you'll soon say good-bye to catarrh.

Fairview Corners

Among those from here who attended Toronto Exhibition were Master Wilie Whyte, Jennet and Sarah Burnett.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Patterson and Mr. and Mrs. Watson visited at Fairview on Sunday.

Some of the farmers have commenced putting in Fall wheat.

Mrs. John Parlow and little girl are on the sink list. Mrs. Archy McLean, sister of Mrs. Alex. Whyte, is also ill.

Hope all may soon have a return to health.

On Wednesday morning last the hospital Sergeant sat at the window patiently awaiting for old Sol to make his appearance from his obscurity behind a dark cloud to the small patch of blue above in order to get at least a short view of the anticipated eclipse. By degrees old Sol continued to rise nearer and nearer to the desired spot until it came into full view, much to the gratification of the Sergeant who in his enthusiasm exclaimed: "Look! ain't it funny, see, how it dances; that's just exactly the way it dances in Ireland every Easter morning, ain't it funny? He then went on to relate how he had known asses in Ireland to be brought into the house the night before Easter and the minute the clock finished striking twelve, the ass would bray. Well, old fellow that's nothing, they are frequently heard to bray here at any hour, Easter or no Easter.

The number of visitors registered last Thursday was 36.

The Managers' desire to express their thanks for donations for the benefit of the inmates, from the following: Mrs. Geo. Lawson, Euphemia, one dollar; Mrs. Artley, Markdale, gem of fruit; the Misses Maidment, Markdale, apples for the old ladies; and a beautiful bouquet of flowers for their sitting room table; Miss Douglas, apples for the old ladies.

Mr. Samuel Hemstock, Chatsworth, spent a day with his relatives, Mr. and Mrs. Harness.

The House was in comparative darkness on Wednesday and Thursday nights, there being no electric lights. Don't know the cause, made no enquiries, but spec summum went wrong in the connection as we understand all was right in the village those nights. They were alright again Friday.

Miss McEwen and Miss McLeod of Manitoulin Island were callers at the Home on Saturday. On account of their coming so long a distance, and will not probably have another opportunity of visiting the Home this season, Mr. Harness kindly deviated from the rule regarding visitors, and courteously showed them through the house at which courtesy they appeared to be very much gratified as well as highly pleased, with everything connected with the Institution. The ladies drove a very prettily matched team of grey ponies.

Your cor. recognises with thanks, the flattering eulogium expressed by the Editor of the Durham Review, in last week's issue,

The fall plowing on this place is well under way, one field is finished and another commenced. They are hustlers here.

On Sunday evening Mrs. Carnigan the blind and demented inmate, unobserved leaped from the window of her room to the ground below. Fortunately the distance was but a few feet and she received no injury. This is another striking instance of the inadequacy of the Home and staffs a place for demented inmates.

Divine service on Sunday last was largely attended. Mr. Cronin delivered a forceful and most impressive discourse from Matt. 16: 30, 31.
