Simon Warner's Will

A gray old farm-house, standing among great tall hickory trees, and beaten by the winds and rains of a century—you never would have guessed that it belonged to the richest man in Seaburne, nor would you have recognized that internal in the wrinkled, sexagenarian who sat on the porch smoking his pipe under the shadow of a perfectly blooming honeysuckle bush was nearly as old as himself.
 It was in the year of 1860 that Simon Warner was troubled with a red glow in his pipe, and he wiped his brow repeatedly with the old-fashioned silk handkerchief he always carried in the breast-pocket of his pepper-colored coat.
 "I don't suppose you'd have gone and let your old uncle in this way, Martin," he said, sternly. "It's a blow to me."
 "What I am sure you would not plan a hearty approval of, would only consider them," he said, coming from a tall, some young fellow with sun-brown cheeks and eyes full of blue, leaning over the railing of the porch and looking at the old man with a look of respect and affection.
 "Then you've made up your mind to let me go off to get myself killed or taken prisoner—it's a matter which—by those Britishers?"
 "No, uncle, I haven't any such intention," laughed young Martin. "I don't have made up my mind to go and do my duty on the field where thousands better than myself have left the stain of their blood."
 "I shall vacillate Uncle Simon," said the young man, good-humoredly.
 "Just as you please," smiled the old man. "Look here, Martin, you say this here country is a better one than wealth or life, will you prove it? If you are determined to make a fool of yourself and to lose all thoughts of ever succeeding to the wealth I have amassed, you act in opposition to my wishes. Be good enough to consider yours, no longer my business."
 "I am poor, uncle," said the young man with changing color, "but not poor enough, I hope, to allow my sense of right and duty to be hindered for gold. Leave your money where you please—its destination cannot influence my decision."
 "Stay, though," pursued Uncle Simon, "I am watching the young fellow from beneath his froxy eyelashes, and he's yet another consideration. Do you suppose Dr. Mackay will give his pretty daughter to a penniless adventurer? Do you think Dora Maylie would have been engaged to you had you not been the heir to my money?"
 The words, although spoken with the bitterest sarcasm, glanced from the ear of the young man with the effect of a scorching wind.
 "I have the firmest faith in Dora's love, uncle," said the young man, extending his hand entreatingly. "Simon Warner, sincerely touched it with his cold, shrivelled palm, and the next moment Martin had disappeared among the tall shrubs of the little door-yard.
 "Gone—he was indeed gone. Up to the last moment Simon Warner had scarcely believed he would go now he must believe it.
 "What do you say, Dora, darling? Will you love your soldier as truly as you loved Uncle Simon's heir?"
 "Martin!"
 It was a very lovely young face that was turned up to his in the silver June moonlight—a face with violet gray eyes, and cheeks faded from pearl into carmine—a face that was truth and purity embodied.
 "Then you will love me still?"
 "I will love you until death, Martin, and through all the ages of eternity."
 He folded the frail figure to his breast with a passionate tenderness that was beyond words.

PASSED CENTURY MARK.

MRS. BAKER DIED IN ST. VINCENT BURNED AT BURNING—HAD REACHED AGE OF 103 YEARS.
 Not many people are privileged to live 103 years, but such was the fortunate lot of Mrs. Baker, of the town line, north, St. Vincent, who died at the residence of her son, George, on Sunday morning, June 21st. Mrs. Baker was truly a remarkable woman, and in her demise the township has lost one of its oldest and most respected residents. Born in Ireland, at a time when that country was in a state of agitation and turmoil even worse than it is to-day, the deceased came to Canada with her parents when a young woman about 23 years of age. The family settled in the township of Brock, which then contained only a few scattered log cabins with vast areas of forests stretching out to view. Toronto at that time was a mere hamlet comprising a few frame buildings of very meagre pretension. Mrs. Baker went to the town and bought McKenzie rebellion and could relate many of the exciting incidents connected with that stirring period in Canadian history. Some of the rebels were provided with food and shelter in the house where she lived, and for some weeks she did the cooking for them.
 That Mrs. Baker should live to survive the centennial period is not surprising in view of the fact that she was never troubled with a headache, nor even knew the taste of medicine. Her recollection of important events in Canadian history was as clear as that of any woman of thirty or forty years, and even up to the time of her illness she could read ordinary print quite distinctly without glasses. In fact, all the old lady's faculties remained unimpaired till the last moment, and she sank to rest as peacefully as a little child.
 Her husband predeceased her about 35 years ago in the house where she died, and since then she continued to make her home with her son, whose scrupulous regard for her happiness proved a source of comfort and consolation to her in her declining years.
 Mrs. Baker was, we understand, the mother of thirteen children, some of whom have passed away. One son (William) resides in Owen Sound. In addition to the children now living, a number of grand-children and great grand-children also survive.
 Mrs. Baker was a woman of deep religious conviction and marked piety, bringing up her large family in the fear and admonition of the Lord.
 The funeral took place to the Church of England cemetery at Bognor on Monday afternoon and was largely attended. Rev. Mr.

Trouble in Durham's Band.

The Review says: "The 31st Regimental Band had a strenuous beginning to their camp life, having lost both cook and leader within 24 hours after arrival. "Somebody blundered" evidently, for there seemed to be neither tent nor victuals provided for them and a meagre pretension. Mrs. Baker went to the town and bought McKenzie rebellion and could relate many of the exciting incidents connected with that stirring period in Canadian history. Some of the rebels were provided with food and shelter in the house where she lived, and for some weeks she did the cooking for them.

WHAT THE KIDNEYS DO.

What Booth's Kidney Pills are Doing for Markdale People.
 All the blood in the body passes through the Kidneys every three minutes.
 The Kidneys filter the blood. They work night and day to daily remove about 100 grains of impure matter. If they fail some part of this impure matter is left in the blood, bringing on pain in the back, headache, dizziness, irregular heart, hot, dry skin, rheumatism, gravel, dropsy, deposits in the urine. Booth's Kidney Pills make the filtering right, and overcome Kidney trouble. Hundreds of Grey County residents have found this out.
 John Stedwill, of Markdale, Ont., says: "My back has been greatly strengthened by the use of Booth's Kidney Pills and the dull, heavy pain that had settled across the region of the kidneys has disappeared. This tenderness had caused me much inconvenience for long time and had weakened me generally. I would take cold across my kidneys very easily and my back would become very tender and painful. The urine would would show a high color and contain a quantity of brick dust sediment. I had tried numerous remedies but found little relief until through an advertisement I procured Booth's Kidney Pills at Turner's Pharmacy and commenced treatment. I soon had found relief and I have been generally benefited by Booth's Kidney Pills and will gladly recommend them."

Mr. Arthur Brinson, 48 London Street, Toronto, writes enthusiastically of the merits of Psychine for all stomach troubles.
 "For seven years I have had indigestion and dyspepsia. I tried scores of remedies. My room resembled a drug store with nostrums which I had bought. Eventually I used Psychine, and every dose brought permanent relief. All throat, eye and stomach troubles quickly cured by Psychine. It is the prescription of a great specialist. At all druggists, 50c and $1.00, or Dr. T. J. Blouin, Limited, Toronto.
 "I there's some false play here! I witnessed a will bequeathing it all to me afore—"
 "What might have been the date of that document, sir?"
 "The third of July. I mind it, because—"
 "Ah, yes, very probable. But this will bears date only six weeks ago. Mr. Martin Warner, allow me to congratulate you upon the inheritance of this splendid property."
 "Alas! there was no cure for the
