W. J. Shortill's New Optical Parlor

Designed for the special purpose and fitted with every modern convenience for successful Eye Testing and Optical Fitting.

The experience of the past ten years has proven that the best in everything is none too good for successful refraction work and for my customers every-day wear.

By a convenient arrangement of grill and screen work which I have just installed, I have converted a portion of my store into a private compartment where you can have your eyes tested and spectacles fitted as accurately and for less money than in the best city stores.

Remember first, last and always that we do not conduct a lottery, game of chance, something-for-nothing, or in any way attempt to dispose of goods other than on merit alone. We always aim at conducting a straight, clean, legitimate business. Trusting to be favored with any purchase you wish to make.

NOTES

A press despatch from Ottawa, dated Nov. 10, says "During the first nine months of this year the immigration department has deported 1011 immigrants as being undesirable citizens. During the same period 1266 people have been refused entry from the United States. These figures indicate the close supervision now being exercised by the Department over new arrivals in Canada. No country has ever received a better class of immigrants than the 120,000 who settled in the Dominion this year. It is understood immigration has practically stopped for this year."

English papers are telling their readers and the world of a fine Christmas present—in value running up into the millions—to King Edward. This truly royal gift is the Cullinan diamond—a present from the Transvaal Government, to His Majesty. The diamond is the largest in the world. Its value is estimated commercially at $3,000,000. The diamond was split into two stones weighing respectively 1,700 and 1,000 carats. Some of the chips from these weigh 50 carats. The two larger stones will adorn the crown and the sceptre of the British sovereign. They are to be known as the Cullinan and Cullinan II.

The managers of the Canadian railways have issued a special order to their train employees regarding the rules for running trains. "For some time past," said an official, "there have been many accidents which have been attributed to the neglect of trainmen. When these men are brought up for investigation by a superintendent they invariably plead that they have not time to study the rules. They will have this excuse no longer, because we intend that they shall be examined every three months while in the company's service. We will give every man a fair chance to become familiar with the laws and if they fail to pass the examination they will be dismissed."

To too lazy to work and too proud to beg, a lot of good-for-nothing, shiftless, unprincipled subjects for the penitentiary are thinking out all sorts of schemes to rob and swindle honest people. Here is a case reported in last week's Buffalo papers: "Rolt. T. Otis, son of the president of the Atlas Manufacturing Company of New Haven, Conn., according to his story, was arrested here Wednesday for securing money under false pretences. He admits that he has made at least $50 a week for a year by 'working' cities in this country and in Canada. He declares that in Toronto he found plenty of easy money. His game has been to call upon prominent families, learning first some of their family connections in other cities, and during the conversation state that his pay cheque had gone to another city, and he would like to obtain the loan of ten dollars for transportation. He represented himself to be an auditor in the Bureau of Pensions."

Anyone who has visited Quebec will agree with Earl Grey that the English-speaking people of Canada have something to learn from their French compatriots in regard to the courtesies and amenities of life. The French-Canadian is always polite.—Toronto News.

There is undoubtedly a great charm about the natural and instinctive courtesy of the French-Canadian especially in the rural districts. The men salute the stranger with a cheerful, "Bon jour, M'sieur!" and the women courteously quaintly with an old-fashioned grace. The little children are equally polite. And this courtesy goes farther than a passing salutation, for if a transient visitor should wish to obtain bed and board, he receives the very best within the house, however humble it may be, and no matter what trouble it may occasion. This is in marked contrast to other parts of Canada where the stranger is more likely to get a cold stare of frostiness, and where the children are in the same class with those who called after Elijah the Prophet: "Go up, thou Bald-head!"

If a few concert directors were to follow the example set by Dr. F. H. Torrington a few nights ago in Toronto, it would not be long before an end—a much-needed end—would be put to one most objectionable features of concert programs. Dr. Torrington was conducting an orchestra at Massey Hall. At the close of the en-

Discretion in Marrying.

Some interesting suggestions concerning discretion in marrying, if not in marriage, have recently been made in the reported utterances of a preacher in Boston and a professor at Harvard. The latter declared it to be a sin against the country for a man to marry whose earnings were less than $800 a year, for the reason that it was not possible to bring up children properly on a smaller income, and to attempt to do so would add to the already overcrowded class of the poor and ignorant and thus lower the standard of American citizenship. The preacher went still further with a declaration that he would refuse to perform the marriage ceremony for any man whose income was less than $12 a week, or for any person who was suffering from tuberculosis—the former because he considered it wrong to encourage the increase of poverty, and the latter because it was a sin to propagate through matrimony the vagaries of the "great white plague."

In theory and principle many will approve these utterances, though to a part of them some exceptions may be taken, and it is obvious that many difficulties would beset the way of putting them into execution. The evils of improvidence, marriage, which practically populate the world with pauper children, are obvious. Yet it would not be just to draw a strict pecuniary rule in the matter. Some parents are better fitted to care for children on $600 a year than others on twice that sum. Moreover, marriage and its responsibilities are often incentives to thrift and to ambition which otherwise might be lacking. Also in some communities or circumstances, marriage might be judicious on a much smaller income than in others. The question of health is more easily determined and, on the whole, much more pertinent. There can be no question of the great physical and moral wrong which is involved in the marriage and percentage of persons suffering from various diseases which are either directly communicable, or at least predisposition hereditary. It has more than once been suggested that licenses to marry should be refused to persons suffering from such maladies, and the arguments in favor of such a course are many and strong.

But perhaps the most noteworthy and commendable feature of the utterances in question is the recognition of the right and indeed, the duty, of the minister or other officer to exercise a certain degree of discretion in accepting candidates for marriage. Too often they have acted as though they had no discretion in the matter, but were under compulsion to perform the marriage for all who might desire it. In this way many deplorable marriages have been contracted. In some cases it has required a violent stretching of charity to accept the plea subsequently made, that the minister did not recognize the impropriety of the match. It is difficult to understand how any minister can appreciatively read the words of the marriage service and then perform that service hastily, thoughtlessly, or for persons of whose fitness for he is not reasonably assured. The plea that in any case it is best to marry a couple lest other evil befall them is, of course, hopelessly specious. Nor is it unfortunately to be granted that all persons have a natural and unalienable right to marry and propagate the race. The general tendency of the civil law is to increase discrimination and to require proofs of fitness, at least in certain respects, before granting licenses, and the very fact that licenses are required implies the power of government to impose certain conditions under which alone marriage is permissible. If such principles prevail for the welfare of the state, they may well prevail also on the grounds of pure morality, making ministers of all men who perform marriage ceremonies the most prudent and circumspect.

The National Anthem.

If a few concert directors were to follow the example set by Dr. F. H. Torrington a few nights ago in Toronto, it would not be long before an end—a much-needed end—would be put to one most objectionable features of concert programs. Dr. Torrington was conducting an orchestra at Massey Hall. At the close of the entertainment when the orchestra began the National Anthem, nearly everyone in the audience, as usual, began the scramble for hats and coats. Dr. Torrington stopped the orchestra, then he informed the astonished audience what the National Anthem was supposed to mean, and expressed the hope that the time would come when "God Save the King" would not be the signal for a rush for the doors. Those who were in that audience will, it is safe to say, remember the incident and profit by it.

But a rebuke to one audience will not break up the senseless habit. It will need a lot of treatment. With a great many it has become second nature to rush, as if the National Anthem were a sort of "All change cars" signal. Something seems to tell them that they MUST be out on the street at once; and they try to make up lost time.

Did they ever stop to consider what the National Anthem is? Probably not, or they would not act with the entire lack of courtesy that now prevails. Did they ever stop long enough to realize that the National Anthem is a prayer for the safety of the reigning sovereign? That they might as well go rushing out of church during the benediction?

The causelessness of all the trouble is thoughtlessness—in other words, selfishness. These offenders against reverence and good manners have never paused to think what they were doing. It has never occurred to them that by their actions using the few moments that should be given to the prayer for His Majesty, to serve their own convenience, they displayed disloyalty and irreverence. They have thought of nothing but that the show's over; it's time to go home. It is possible to bring them to realize the true meaning of the National Anthem. The task will not be easy; habit dies hard. But it is possible; and if means are adopted—precept, caution, even ridicule—to point out what is expected of them, we do not despair of yet seeing the day when the people will stand quietly, reverently and join in singing "God Save the King," leaving hats and wraps at the anthem is finished.
