Leaving the Old Folks.
Yes wife, I guess we're gettin' old, but don't you take on so. Come, dry your eyes an' try to think 'was right that she should go; of course the house is solemn-like and still, but if you find your mother suffered jes' the same when you left her behind; her mother must have felt it too, for since the world was known, young folks have married off an' left th' old folks all alone. Come! come! don't sob as though all joy had vanished from your life, 'was right that she should do it; God meant her for a wife; of course we'll miss her smiling face and miss her words of cheer, and oft when supper time is done, we'll wish that she was here. To sing those simple songs again, 'th' way she did before. He came into her life an' led her smiling from the door. An' I—I'll miss her, too, because when my day's work is through I'd like to see her come to me, the way she used to do, bringing my slippers to the fire an' kneelin' by my chair to put 'em on, the while I stroked her wreath of golden hair. An' then I'll think her husband gets the favors that were mine. An' those are perquisites of love it's hardest to resign. But wife, don't sigh and take on so, it's mighty plain to me. You're thinking of the days gone by when she played about your knee; Jes' recollect she's grown up now, it's right that she should go, an' though it's hard on us at times, our grief we shouldn't show; An' while we're sittin' here tonight 'my only wish is she Will be as good a wife to him as you have been to me.

Catarrhone is so sure, so pleasant, such a safe remedy for winter ills that you can't afford to do without it. Sold by all dealers, 25c. and $1.00. Get Catarrhone today.

SNAKE WAS COLD.

When Mrs. Raz, of Listowel, opened the door on Monday morning, she beheld a most unwelcome visitor in the form of a large snake curled up closely beside the kitchen door, which she at once dealt with. The reptile had probably been attracted by the kitchen fire and crawled up the steps, but it is safe guessing that it will never again give a like performance.
