Obituary Poetry.

Since The Standard has, to certain extent, placed a ban on the publishing of obituary poetry by charging ten cents a line for in sertion in its columns, we have not been greatly troubled with this class of material. Many other papers have taken the same proceeding, and the almost prohibitive price has had the desired effect, viz., the eradication from our columns of the stuff some people imagine to be poetry. It's remarkable how a bereavement stirs up the poetical strain in some people and causes them to issue forth effusions which would make Bill Shakespeare turn green with envy were he alive, for Bill in his palmiest days never wrote anything like the following which some time ago was handed to The Standard for insertion, but the rate of ten cents a line was responsible for its non-appearance. We now publish it free to show what some people dish up and im- "The Soul's Awakening" agine to be the real thing:
