

Dusty Friday - No More

"DUSTBANE"

Is a green colored powder, packed in tin cans ready for use. In sweeping the carpet, take one or two handfuls, according to the dust. Sprinkle where you are to begin (not all over the carpet), then sweep as you always do. The powder is swept ahead of the broom, and falling on the carpet absorbs the dust, leaving the carpet clean and bright. The dust is not thrown into the air to settle back on the carpet and furniture.

DUSTBANE should be used in sweeping carpets, rugs, straw matting and bare floors.

Why You Should Use Sanitary Points

Dustbane
It saves labor on sweeping. One half your dusting. Your carpets and rugs. Damage by moths. Taking up carpets. Your health. Your money.

Sickness and disease are often contracted by breathing into the lungs germ-laden dust. DUSTBANE contains an anti-septic fluid which kills the germs. The evaporation of this fluid while sweeping, thoroughly disinfects the room. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure.

It Costs Nothing to Try

J. ARTLEY is authorized by the manufacturers of DUSTBANE to send you a 35¢ can of their Sweeping Compound. They want you to use this on trial for one week. At the end of this period if not found satisfactory we will take it back and there will be no charge for quantity used.

IF IT DOES AWAY WITH DUST ON SWEEPING DAY YOU WANT IT.

DUSTBANE can be secured in 1/2 barrels and 1/4 barrels for school, store and factory use.

45 Berlin Stores, Schools and Factories are using DUSTBANE

THE TURKISH SHADOW

QUAINT SHOW IS STILL GIVEN IN TURKEY.

The Karagoz Plays Are Held During the Fasting Month of Ramadan and Effect Is Produced With Leather Figures, the Shadows of Which Are Thrown on a Screen—Showmen Often Very Expert.

An old and still popular form of amusement in the Orient is the Karagoz play, commonly called a shadow play, but more correctly speaking, a silhouette play.

Turkish tradition names as the inventor and patron of these plays Shah Kuchterli, a dervish of Brusa. The play is found not only in those parts of Turkey where the Turkish language is spoken, but also translated into Arabic, in the neighboring Arabic provinces, and into Persian. Turks and Tripes have borrowed the idea and have their own Arabic form down in Africa.

The public performances of the Karagoz plays are given at only one season of the year, during the fasting month of Ramadan. Ordinarily in the Mohammedan quarter of Constantinople everything stops at sunset, and respectable people are all safely in after dark behind their own locked gates. During Ramadan, however, eating and drinking are forbidden from sunrise to sunset. And the clever Oriental, not to be done out of his three meals a day by so simple a thing as a mere fasting season, plans to sleep in the daytime and do his eating at night. Now, as their country people are all safely in after dark, the people who have slept all day are obliged to have recourse to whatever forms of amusement are offered. All sorts of light and more or less genteel comedies are presented in the cafes, and among these are always some of the Karagoz pieces.

The apparatus for these plays consists of a canvas screen, back of which is placed a lighted olive oil lamp. The figures are made of leather and are attached to a slender rod. The shadow player sits behind the lamp and manipulates the figures by pressing them against the canvas. At the same time speaking for them, changing his voice to suit the character represented.

It will readily be seen that to do this kind of mechanical skill and practical art necessary, as well as imagination and imitative power. A German who has done some work on the Karagoz plays speaks of a shadow player whose talent he considered equal to that of any European actor. Sometimes an amateur has a set of the figures, which he uses for his own amusement. I was told of a secretary in the Sultan's palace, who owns a set, which he is very skillful in manipulating for the entertainment of his men friends.

Each figure enters singing a characteristic song, accompanied by flutes and kettle-drums. The song has nothing whatever to do with the plot of the piece; and the wit of the shadow player has free rein. Local allusions are plentiful, and what makes these songs all the funnier, they are sung in a falsetto voice, instead of in the natural register.

The principal characters are Karagoz and Hadjevad. Karagoz is the genuine type of stage fool, apparently stupid and simple, who, nevertheless, through mother wit, often gets the better of much wiser people than himself. Hadjevad represents the high gentleman who intermingles his conversation with his own Persian and Arabic words. Karagoz does not know the meaning of these foreign words, and all sorts of ludicrous mistakes occur as a result. Madam Karagoz, the Turkish wife of the leading character, appears occasionally, but only in a minor part.

There are hosts of other secondary roles, played by men, women, and children, as even by animal and grotesques, an animal with a man's head, for instance. Natural types are often represented, the Persian with his tall, black, lamb's wool turban, the woodchopper from the interior of the country, the Arnaut in armor, the merchant Jews, Greeks, Arabians, and Armenians, and each one speaking Turkish in the way that is peculiar to his own nationality. This use of dialect, in itself a never failing source of comedy, is brought out most effectively in the singing of the songs that introduces each character.

There are a few stock jokes, which have been handed down and never fail to appear. When Karagoz's wife kills her husband for what seems to him an unnecessary large sum of money to go to the public baths, he inquires, "Do you wish to buy the entire outfit?" The same joke comes in when a boatman asks Karagoz three times the usual price for rowing him across the Bosphorus. "What! he exclaims, "Do you think I want to buy your boat? In a land of fixed prices, you may have to be explained that these are really very good jokes. The sparkling bits of repartee, which one may overhear any day at a Turkish boat landing or stand in a bargaining controversy, add color to allusions of this sort.

The plays are very simple in construction, consisting of but one act, and frequently of more than one or two scenes. There is often a prologue, spoken generally by Hadjevad, in which we are instructed as to the value of the shadow play; that it is not merely a representation of shadow figures, but a picture of the world as well, from which one may gain valuable bits of wisdom. Honorable mention is also made of Kuchterli, inventor of the shadow play.

And, last of all, there is an apology in advance for any mistakes the actors may make. The pieces are constantly changing, the skillful player improvising to suit the occasion. There is no fixed text, and each production, being from memory, brings out new jokes. If the texts of two different presentations were taken down, they would be found to agree only in the main trend of the plot and action.
