The Lure of the Mask

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

What humans are chiefly hunting for nowadays is inspiration in one form or another. This story cannot fail to give its reader inspiration, and therefore its value can hardly be overestimated. The magic of the love of man for woman, that, aroused simply by the sound of a voice, causes a young millionaire to cross oceans and traverse foreign lands to find his fate was never better pictured. The story is intensely romantic and alluringly mysterious. The insidious evils of unwise marriage with foreign "noblemen" are cleverly shown, and the familiar Italian brand of intrigue is laid bare. The author shows that the reward of patience and purity is happiness and that the wages of sin is death. He makes you laugh when he pictures the adventures of an American comic opera troupe stranded in foreign lands. He makes you thrill with the wanderlust when he describes La Bella Napoli and the vine covered slopes that rim the Mediterranean.

CHAPTER I THE VOICE IN THE FOG.

OUT of the somber night of January fog, came a voice, lifted in song, a soprano, rich, full and round, yet matured, sweet and mysterious as a night bird's haunting and elusive as the murmur of the sea in a shell—a lilt from "La Fille de Mme. Angot," a light opera long since forgotten in New York. Hilliard, genuinely astonished, lowered his pipe and listened.

The voice rose and sank and soared again, drawing nearer and nearer. It was joyous and unstrained, and there was youth in it, the touch of spring and the breath of flowers. The music was Leococ's—that is to say, French—but the tongue was of a country which Hilliard knew to be the garden of the world. Presently he observed a shadow emerge from the yellow mist, to come within the circle of light, which, faint as it was, limned in against the nothingness beyond the form of a woman. She walked directly under his window.

As the invisible comes suddenly out of the future to assume distinct proportions which either make or mar us, so did this unknown cantatrice come out of the fog that night and enter into Hilliard's life; to readjust its ambitions, to divert its aimless course, to give impetus to it and a directness which hitherto it had not known.

He leaned over the sill at a perilous angle, the bright coal of his pipe spilling comet-wise to the driveway below. He was only subconscious of having spoken, but this syllable was sufficient to spoll the enchantment. The voice ceased abruptly, with an odd break. The singer looked up. Possibly her astonishment surpassed even that of her audience. For a few minutes she had forgotten that she was in New York; she had forgotten the pain in her heart; there had been only an irresistible longing to sing.

peculiar whimsical freak had sent her singing past his window at 1 o'clock of the morning? A grand opera singer returning home from a late supper? But he dismissed this opinion even as he advanced it. He knew something about grand opera singers. They attend late suppers, it is true, but they ride home in luxurious carriages and never risk their golden voices in this careless if romantic fashion. As for being a comic opera star, he refused to admit the possibility, and he relegated this well satisfied constellation to the darks of limbo. He had heard a voice.

A policeman came lumbering over to add or subtract his quota of interest in the affair. Hilliard wisely stopped and waited for him. "I heard a woman singin'," the guard-tan of the law said roughly. "So did I." "Huh! See her?" "For a moment," Hilliard admitted. "Well, we can't have none of this in the streets. It's disorderly." "My friend," said Hilliard, rather annoyed at the policeman's tone, "you don't think for an instant that I was hearing this operetta?" "Think? Where's your hat?" Hilliard ran his hand over his head. The policeman had him here. "I did not bring it out."

"Too warm and summery, huh? It don't look good. I've been watchin' these parts for a leddy: They call her Liddy Lightfinger, an' she has some of the gents done to a pulp when it comes to liftin' jools an' trinkets. Somebody fergits to lock the front door, an' she finds it out. Why did you come out without yer lid?" "Just forgot it, that's all."

"Which way'd she go?" "You'll need a map and a search-light. I started to run after her myself. I heard a voice from my window; I saw a woman; I made for the street; niente!" "Huh?" "Niente, nothing!" "Oh, I see—dago. Seems to me now that this woman was singin' Italy an' too." They were nearing the light, and the policeman gazed intently at the business young man. "Why, it's Mr. Hilliard! I'm surprised. Well, well! Some day I'll run in a bunch of these chorus liddies, jes' for a lesson. They get lively at the restaurants over on Broadway, an' then they raise the dead with their singin', which often as not is anything but singin'. An' here it is after 1."

"But this was not a chorus lady," replied Hilliard, thoughtfully reaching into his vest for a cigar. "The lady had a singing voice." "Huh! They all think alike about that. But mebbe she wasn't bad at the business. Anyhow?" "It was rather out of time and place, eh? helpfully." "That's about the size of it. This Liddy Lightfinger is a case. She has us all thinkin' on our lights off—'Cleveland an' edicated an' jabbars in half a dozen tongues. It's a thousand to the man who jugs her. But she don't sing; at least they ain't any report to that effect. Perhaps your leddy was jes' larkin' a bit. But it's got to be stopped."

the policeman bit off the end, nodding with approval at such foresight. "Didn't get a peep at her face?" "Not a single feature. The light was behind her."

"An' how was she dressed?" "In fog, for all I could see." "On the level now, didn't you know you she was?" The policeman gave Hilliard a sly dig in the ribs with his club. "On my word?" "Some swell, mebbe."

"Undoubtedly a lady. That's why it looks odd—why it brought me into the street. She sang in classic Italian. And, what's more, for the privilege of hearing that voice again I should not mind sitting on this cold curb till the milkman comes around in the morning."

"That wouldn't be fer long," laughed the policeman, taking out his watch and holding it close to the end of his cigar. "Twenty minutes after 1. Well, I must be gittin' back to me beat. Been to Italy?"

"I was born there," patiently. "No! Why, you're no dago!" "Not so much as an eyelash. The stork happened to drop the basket there, that's all!" "Ha, I see! Well, Ameriky is good enough fer me an' mine," complacently. "I dare say!"

"An' if this stogy continues to behave we'll say no more about the van'tsin' leddy." The policeman strolled off, his suspicions in nowise removed. He knew many rich young bachelors like Hilliard. If it wasn't a chorus lady it was a prima donna, which was not far from being the same thing.

Hilliard regained his room and leaned with his back to the radiator. He had an idea. It was rather green and salad, but as soon as his hands were warm he determined to put this idea into immediate use. The voice had stirred him deeply, stirred him with the longing to hear it again, to learn what extraordinary impulse had loosed the song.

Never the winter came with its weary round of rain and fog and snow that his heart and mind did not fly over the tideless southern sea to the land of his birth if not of his blood—Sorrento, that jewel of the sun bathed cliffs!

With a quick gesture of both hands—Latin, always Latin—he crossed the room to a small writing desk, turned on the lights and sat down. After several attempts he realized that the letter he had in mind was not the simplest to compose. There were a dozen futile efforts before he produced anything like satisfaction. Then he filled out a small check. A little later he stole downstairs, around the corner to the local branch of the postoffice and returned. It was only a blind throw, such as deers sometimes make in the dark. But chance loves her true gamester, and to him she makes a faithful servant.

He picked up a novel. "I should be sorely tempted to call any other man a silly ass. Liddy Lightfinger—it would be a fine joke if my finger turned out to be that irregular person."

Good, Better or Best? A VITAL DIFFERENCE IN RESULTS

QUALITY you know is comparative. Just as much so in bread, as in woollens or linens. If you make bread at all you naturally want it to be good—as good as, or better than your neighbor's. But is your bread as good as it ought to be? Does it furnish its full quantum of health and strength? Is it nutritious as well as delicious? Ordinary flour may make fairly good looking bread. But if you care for food value, for nutrition, for digestibility, for bone and muscle and blood building quality, you will want a flour rich in the highest quality of gluten. "ROYAL HOUSEHOLD" is the finest flour in the world and makes the best bread in the world.

Besides, I have held a sword for the church. I owe no allegiance to the puny house of Savoy! There was no twinkle in the black eyes now. There was a ferocious gleam. "Pardon, signor. I grow boastful. I am old and should know better. But does the signor return to Italy in the spring?" "I don't know, signor; I don't know. But what's on your mind?" "Nothing new, signor," with eyes cast down to hide the returning lights. "You are a bloodthirsty ruffian!" said Hilliard shortly.

"I am as the good God made me. Besides, the holy father will do something for one who fought for the cause." (To be Continued.) In the evening a baseball game between Flesher and Vandeleur was played which resulted in a score of 11-11.
