BAKED TRIPE SPANISH STYLE

Boil four pounds of fresh tripe till Drain, sprinkle with salt and pepper, and arrange in a well-buttered pan. Pour over it one quart of chopped tomatoes, one large onion sliced very thin, half a cupful of chopped parsley, and, if it is liked, the skin of a large red pepper, minced fine. A teaspoonfu of Tabasco sauce may be used if more flavor is liked. Pour over all one half cupful of melted butter and bake for-one hour. This is equal to the finest BOILED TRIPE WITH RICE Put two pounds of fresh tripe to boil in two quarts of water. Add one chapped onion, a bit of garlic, three tomatoes eliced, salt and pepper, and when half the water has boiled away put in a small cupful of rice. Simmer gently and serve when the rice is dry.

TOMATO SOUP WITH MACARONI. The left-over macaroni of yesterday's dish may be used in the soup. If there is none left, rice may be used, as it is not patricularly desirable to have macaroni or any other foodstuff two days in succession, unless there are left-overs to be

FRIED FLOUNDERS.

Two hours before wanted, cleanse nice ly and rub all over with salt. Wipe dry and dip into beaten egg; sprinkle with cracker, pounded, or crumbs. Fry about ten minutes in boiling lard. WAFFLES.

One pint sour milk; put in flour until batter drops from spoon; add two table spoonfuls of melted butter, two beaten separately, one tablesponful o sugar, one teaspoonful of soda half-teaspoonful salt; add whites last. STUFFED TRIPE.

Sclect long strips of fresh tripe and boil in salted water till tender. Prepare a dressing as for roast chicken or tur-key, spread it thinly on the strips of tripe, roll them and secure with a wooden skewer-a toothpick answers nicely Arrange the rolls in a buttered pan and This is an excellent luncheon dish and is very dainty served cold, the slices cut round the rolls like jelly cake.

NIGHT NOISES OF FOREST

Animals and Birds That Seldom Move About in the Daytime.

Nothing can be more weird, more mys terious, than night in the forest. Wel versed in hunting lore though he be, a cannot identify. The hours of darkness are not hours of silence, for there are birds and beasts whose day begins only after sundown, who seek their food in the black night while the diurnal crea-One of the very commonest animals in the East, the porcupine, is to completely nocturnal in its habits that it is rarely seen. Perhaps as you ride by moonlight your pony shies at a whitish, rustling something which crosses the track just ahead of him, says a correspondent of the Field, or your favorite terrier, after a marauding expedition, will return with a stout and cruel quill embedded in the muscles of his chest. The silent watch over a kill for a goal stealing leopard is full of ceriness and mystery. Ears are intensely on the alert, so that no sound in the vicinity is missed. Then is made startlingly manifest the strange couble life of the jungle, the life of the night as opposed to the much more familiar life.

of the day. Everywhere around are strange move ments and rustlings, while those creatures which move across such of the foreground as is illuminated by the uncertain rays of the moon seem to take on fantastic shapes, until after many nights of watching it is almost easy to believe in pixies and goblins, or even the strange beings of native legend.

In Kashmir on a spur overlooking the Lolab Valley we had pitched our dining tent under a huge walnut tree. Every night strange rustlings and chatterings used to come from its ample foliage and walnuts detached by busy teeth would tumble from the tree. We took our visitors to be flying squirrels and made attempts to shoot one of them; but though we had a big log fire close to and illuminated the walnut tree with pine torches as well, we never actually saw one of the animals nor established their identity for certain.

In the plains of India and Ceylon the great fruit eating bats are no doubt responsible for many of the night sounds heard among the tree tops. Then there are huge insects of many kinds, whose crawling among the dry leaves adds largely to the noises which come from the ground. Crocodiles become very active at night and make considerable excursions from their watery

I have known a grocodile to walk 200 yards from the edge of a lake in which it lived in order to reach the carcass of a dead pig. On its return it dragged the pig with it to the lake; the broad trail told the whole story next morning as cicarly as though we had witnessed the entire performance. Sambhur and sloth bears are also creatures of the night, the deer particularly so in Ceylon, probably because they are so incessantly harried by hunters. On the Neilgherries and in Wynaad I used to see sambhur come out to feed comparatively early in the evening, while they did not retreat to their midday haunts till some time after sunrise. Bears in Ceylon are so seldom seen by day that it is customary to sit over water holes for them in the hot weather. and they find cave dwellings such as No, unless she has married a man to There are plenty of them in the island, love among the numerous rocky reform him.

hills which are a feature of the Ceylon forests.

Though it is hard to know who or what are the makers of the incessant movement which is going on all night in the woods the actual voices of birds and animals are by no means equally difficult to identify. In the hills, even in a big station like Mussoorie, are constantly heard the loud calls of barking deer; the little createre's resonant bark is almost indistinguishable from that of a dog. The muntjac is said to be par-ticularly vociferous when there is a leo-pard about. I have, however, often heard these tiny deer barking a a most excited | way when there could have been no leopards within many miles.

A very familiar warning of the approach of night is the squawk of night herons as they sail overhead. In most Indian compounds is found a family of quaint little brown owls who come out of the hollow tree where they spend the day as soon as dusk descends and begin their voluble chatter. Natives are very superstitious about the big gray-white owls and consider them to be the harbingers of evil, but no bad odon attaches to the merry little brown fellow who is everybody's friend.

Hindoos have all sorts of beliefs regarding trees. If you want a man to tell the absolute truth you take him tells the absolute truth you take him tells. neath a pipal. Under the shadow of the pipal every Hindu is supposed to be come a George Washington. In the Madras hills the natives always regard large trees as the abodes of devils. Near a bungalow I lived in at Wellington, 10 miles from Ootacamund, there was large hollow tree. In the hollow pious hands had erected a miniature altar of bricks, and on this were usually to be seen one of those little classically-shaped clay lamps to burn mustard oil and a few tiny coins to propitiate the devil who lived in the tree.

On the other hand there are aboriginal tribes in Wynazd who never leave the shelter of the pathless forest. I have stood on a hill and looking over the vast jungles of Mysore have seen thin smoke wreaths ascending far away from the centre of the forest, the fires of those jungle men cooking their evening

SMOKE'S EFFECT ON BRIDGES.

Instances of Structures Which Materially Injured.

When a locomotive is making speed against a grade with its full complement of cars and tonnage behind it the blast from the smokestack may attain almost explosive force. But regardless of how many pounds dead weight might be from the stack, its corrosive and heat effects in passing under bridge and viaduct structures have been under care ful study by the engineers.

The "Cotton Farm" bridge in Boston was built in 1896 with a clearance of only fifteen feet above the line of the Boston & Maine road. The floor of the bridge was supported by hollow tile arches, resting upon flanges of steel "I". beams. These steel beams were protected by heavy lead plates and above were rendered rust proof by cement tiles.

In ten years the locomotive blast had eaten into the lead sheeting and into the tiling to such an extent that much of the coating fell to the ground and all of it had to be torn out,

At another point in Boston is a bridge spanning the road where locomotives in one direction take a heavy grade in passing. The height of the clearance is eighteen feet, while the bridge has only wooden stringers.

On the up grade end of the bridge, where forced blast is necessary, the stringers are eroded and burned to a depth of a quarter inch; on the down grade end damage is not noticeable. The udgment of the engineers is that eighteen feet clearance allows of a cheaper bridge and a longer life to it than the more costly structure at the minimum of fifteen feet .- From the Chicago Trib-

Change in English Prayerbook.

The accession of a new sovereign in Great Britain brings about many changes, but none, perhaps, so full of sentiment as the changes necessary in the Book of Common Prayer. The name Edward, wherever it appears, must now be changed to read George. In the litany is a prayer for the welfare of the royal personages close to the sovereign. This now reads "our gracious Queen Alexandra, George Prince of Wales, the Princess of Wales, and all the royal family.' The plates from which the book is printed are being altered, and the following will appear: "Our gracious Queen Mary, Alexandra the Queen Mother, Edward Duke of Cornwall, and all the royal With every change of soverfamily." eigns an alteration similar to this is necessary.
