There was but one inn and that far from imposing. Still they were hunmy, and there was no diligence beyond Ontro before the following morning. They went to be inn. They had been the only passengers in the train and were therefore the only new ruests at the inn.

They were received with a great thow of eager hospitality. They drank and are and felt refreshed.

To pass away the time they dawdled a room opening off the little public drawing room. This was a gaming. com, and four men were playing at a buge uncouth billiard table. Vandal and his companions stood looking at the game. Well said one of the players after time, "this is thirsty business. Have some good beer brought-do."

He spoke in the German tongue, though scarcely what would be heard stood in the doorway while Vandal walked to the woman.

"Madame, make me happy with a look at your face," he said, with a laugh, and, in a manner scarcely as polite as his words, he grasped her hair and bent back her head so as to see her face.

A truly feminine screech came from her, and she called a name. In an instant the astonished Vandal was on the floor, with the four billiard players on top of him, pounding him, kicking him and stabbing him in the stomach with their cues.

"Scoundrel!" yelled one. "French dog!" "Call- Robard!" shouted another. Here is a rascal from France who insults the hausfrau!" And while Vandal was being well thumped Reber and Robello, never very brave, fled from the place into the dark and unknown street.

> CHAPTER X. FOUR AGAINST ONE.

The inn also sheltered a band of robbers and cutthroats, the chief members of which were the four billiard players that had jumped upon Vandal. In response to the cries for Robard, that gentleman, a rotund and ruddy faced rascal, came puffing in.

"Here, here! What is the matter? Have you lost your senses?" he :demanded. "Have you no sense whatever? Is this the place to knock down travelers and take their coin? Oh! You will hang out a sign next, Travelers Neatly Robbed Here!"

"Dr. Miles' Nervine Raised, Me From the Grave"-Mrs. Taylor

This is a strong statement to make, but it is exactly what Mrs. Thomas Taylor, of Blum, Texas, said in expressing her opinion of this remedy.

"Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine raised me from the grave and I have much confidence in it. I can never say enough for your grand medicines. If anyone had offered me $100.00 for the second bottle of Nervine that I . used I would have said 'no indeed." MRS. THOMAS TAYLOR,

With evident reluctance they got up from Vandal's prostrate body, and he slowly and painfully got to his feet. "The devil! You fellows are brave!" he said, with a puff and groan. "Four to one! Well I must say it is not the way we do in France,"

"Ho! France! I have been there." said Robard. "They don't give you a chance to explain there. The garrote; the robbery; the morgue!"

"Give the fellow a chance to explain, I say!" insisted the advocate of fair play.

Vandal staggered to a chair and begged for a glass of cognac. This was brought him, and after wallowing that and gathering his wits and energies he began his explanation.

"You see," he said, "I and my two companions were - where are they now? They deserted me in my need. Find the fools, I beg, or they will create a disturbance. They will run half way through Deneslia telling that I am being murdered here."

The one who seemed to be the leader of the gang was as much alarmed at this as Vandal seemed to be. He at once stepped outside and gave orders

"Here, here! Have you lost your senses?" to some hangers on to find the two strangers in Ontro and return them to the inn with every assurance of safe-

Vandal resumed: "You see, I and my companions came from Paris in search of a young fellow who had robbed us-that is, who had robbed a friend of mine of several thousand francs." "What is this the fellow is saying?" asked Fran Robard, who had returned when quiet was restored. She did not understand French.

"I will speak German," said Vandal, who was quite a linguist in his way. "You see I and my companions came from Paris in search of a young fellow who robbed a friend of mine of several thousand francs in money; some valuables and some fine clothing. We traced the rascal to Strassburg, and then from city to city and almost through Prussia. We lost the trail at last but the direction had steadily been toward Deneslia, and, knowing that he had friends here, we believed he would make for this country. We knew that he left Paris in the disguise of a woman. Hetarrived at Strassburg in the same disguise. And now the mysterious part of it is thisthat he wore a gown the counterpart of the one Frau Robard now has on. I am sure of this, and was so sure that the moment I set eyes on the gown I believed the wearer of it to be the

"To make sure, I stepped up to the lady, and, thinking more than ever that I was right, rudely raised her head in order to see her face. Imagine my amazement and consternation when I beheld the sweet face of good Frau Robard. Oh, I assure you, gentlemen, it was a most grievous error on my part, and no one could regret it more than I did, especially when I felt your billiard ches ramming me in the stom-

"Well, the evil is not so great, if the. good frau can forgive me." A look of great significance passed from Robard to the younger of the four, who was his son. "And you say this fellow was a thief? asked the elder Robard. "How, much did you say he stole?" It flashed into the mind of Vandal that the paltry amount of a thousand francs was not sufficient loss to cause three men to chase across Europe at an expense beyond that to recover it. "Why, so far as we could ascertain," he answered, "the rascal took in money 12,000 francs, several diamond ornaments, ladies' jewelry and a fine gold

Another flash of intelligence from old Robard to his son

"Well, my friend," said the old man, "I can explain the matter of the gown very easily. There came to this inn from the train yesterday a young man who claimed to be a peddler. In fact, he had a valise, and in that valise he carried this gown, which he offered for sale. It took the fancy of my wife a: once, and she made a bargain with him. She took the gown, he took the money, spent the night here and this morning departed."

"What sort of a man? How did he ook?" asked Vandal. "Oh, a young fellow. He spoke French, but I fancied he was more like those accursed English. He spoke also German to the wife."

"Smooth face, dark brown hair, good eves? "The same. Evidently the same. Though a thief who steals like that would not own good eyes long." "Oh, this fellow was a good actor. He can appear to be anything." "He must be a marvel!" "He is. Which way did he go?" "Well, now, to tell the truth, I do not remember. I think he went on toward Trolle. At least he purchased horse of me." At this point the two frightened associates were brought in, and their eyes opened at seeing the man they

"Our man has gone on toward Trolle," said Vandal. "Our friends here did not know they were letting prize slip through their fingers. Why, there is a prize of 5,000 francs offered by the Paris police for the return of the man to them. Oh, you should have held him!" Again that quick flash from father
