NOTHING LIKE LEATHER. A London bookseller tells the following amusing story of a conversation he held recently with a well-todo, but illiterate, dient:—"I must have some books," the latter re-marked, and went on to explain that he had found an empty library in a house which he had purchased in Kensington. His only condition was that the volumes should be handsome. The bookseller suggested that half should be bound n Russia and half in Morocco. HELPFUL WIVES.

It is not always the wife who tands behind her husband's counter, or shares his office or labors with him, shoulder to shoulder, who is the greatest help to a man. Many women distinctly feminine, and, to all appearances, hopelessly unbusinesslike, are first aids to the busy husband, and they seldom or never enter the shops, offices, or factories over which their husbands rule. A woman blessed with the faculty of saying or doing the right thing at the right minute is bound to be a nelp to her husband. The woman who can make herself indispensable to her husband as his social mentor and co-entertainer has many pleasures which the less tactful sisters miss. Everyone recognizes as a bore the woman who is forever quoting the clever sayings of her husband, and dwelling at length upon his good points, his success in business, etc., but the wife who knows when to drop a hint that counts is the real helpmate.
