Rum and Railroading.

The passenger traffic manager of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad says that his company expects to be criticized for stiffening up its rules against the use of intoxicants by its trainmen. Criticised by whom? Certainly not by the public, which does not want to ride in trains manned by drunken crews whose mental faculties are chilled by the irregular habits of dissipation.

If the company is criticised by its employees for its strictness it will do well to keep a watch on the personal habits of its critics. If they want to be free to drink and frequent places where drink is sold they should go into some other employment. There responsibility for the safety of others is not so great! The grave responsibility of railroading justly railroads in requiring their employers to live in much a way as to have their facilities about them on duty. There is no use in making a law to prevent trainmen from working such long hours that they become dull and sleepy when at their posts if they are going to spend their time off not in rest but in dissipation.

Notes.

At least 50,000 horses, says the Animal Husbandry Department in the service of the United Kingdom, are now in the hands of independent breeders. The number is constantly increasing. The greatest care is taken of these splendid animals and in the hospitals connected with the staples the treatment is given. Turkish baths, baths of oxygen and air baths are among the most scientific. The examining of foals is carefully attended to and the animals gathered before the foals are removed for use.

The plan of Hon. W. D. Hamlin, Minister of the Provincial Secretary for the modernisation of roads in all around the Dominion and the Agricultural College at Guelph are now well advanced, according to a dispatch. The work will be proceeded with next year on the passing of the estimated through the last board. The plan of the government covering the cost of the new road in the lowest cost, with concrete culverts and everything complete. It will be used as a model for country road builders all over the provinces. The cost of construction will be borne by the Government.
