CHAPTER I (Continued)

There is a gleam of hope in the eyes of the young man who has just stepped out of the door of the drawing-room. He is looking at the clock on the wall, and he is wondering how long it will be before he can see her again. He is looking at the door, and he is wondering how long it will be before he can see her again. He is looking at the door, and he is wondering how long it will be before he can see her again.

CHAPTER II

Madam Curzon only knew it, there was very little in Frank Hallett's words to cause her to be surprised. She was sitting in the drawing-room, and she was looking at the clock on the wall, and she was wondering how long it will be before he can see her again.

chance. Now let us forget it for the present. Is that a new ring upon your finger? May I look at it? Does it mark a triumph?

"No; an old one. Geoffrey Hyde gave it to me last autumn." She surrenders her hand to him, and he examines it leisurely, the cluster of brilliants that sparkle and shimmer beneath the lamplight.

"He has been faithful to you for a long time," says Hallett, presently.

"Yes, he is very charming. I really believe I shall have to marry him in the long run, if only to get him out of the way." She reaches a little as she says this, and laughs at her own thought.

"Are you serious?" asks Hallett, with surprise. "Then you are going to make him a happy man, after all?"

"That must be proved. Probably I shall make him a wholesome warning to all obstinate men. But I think when last I saw him I made some foolish promise about marrying him in the spring."

"I congratulate him with all my heart, and you too," says Hallett, cordially. "I think he is the only man I know quite worthy of you."

When the hour comes for bedroom candles to be adjusted, Hallett, seeing one of the maids carrying a basket to Miss Mordant, but, quick as he has been, Major Blake reaches her side similarly armed, and says to her, "Good night."

"Which shall I take?" says Miss Mordant, early. "I suppose I can have my choice. I think I will take the one that has the prettiest gem. Thank you," she continues, and she looks at the basket with a pleased expression. "I will take the one that has the prettiest gem. Vegetable Chowder.—One-half quart of stock, two slices of ham bone, two fresh or one canned, one two tablespoons of dried beans, one tablespoon of peas, fresh or canned, two onions, cut into small pieces, or, if desired, a ham bone substituted for the pork. Add the tomatoes, cut into small pieces, also, the onions, in small pieces, and the rice. Boil all together until the rice is cooked. Then add the peas and the peas and cook a little longer. The soup is ready when it is thick. If desired this chowder can be made with fish broth instead of the stock, and with the addition of shrimps which have been taken from their shells. The dish can be served hot or cold.

Macaroni with Tomato Sauce.—Two quarts of water, three-quarters pound of macaroni. Boil the water until it makes big bubbles. Add salt, then break the macaroni and put it in. Cover the saucepan and boil for 15 minutes. The saucepan should not be too small, otherwise the macaroni will stick to the bottom. Prepare the sauce as follows: Take a good slice of ham fat and chop very fine with a piece of onion, a piece of celery and some parsley. Put this in a frying pan and cook until the grease is colored. (If desired, add a small lump of butter.) When well colored add two tablespoons of tomato paste dissolved in a little hot water. Boil all together for 15 minutes. Drain the macaroni and put it into the frying pan with the sauce, mix well with fork and spoon over the fire, so that the macaroni will be thoroughly seasoned. Then add three tablespoons of grated Parmesan cheese, mix again and serve. If no tomato paste is available use fine onion, a quarter of an onion, a piece of celery and a small bunch of parsley. Slice seven or eight tomatoes (fresh or canned), add salt and pepper, and mix all on together. Cook in four tablespoons of good olive oil. Stir occasionally, and when it becomes as thick as cream strain and add the macaroni as before directed.

"I'm glad to see you," she says, looking at him, and searches her mind for a laudatory word that tantalizes him into saying, "Never mind it, I won't interfere with your enjoyment this time."

"Black! Oh, my!"

"Yes, certainly, is gay clothing so necessary to me, then?"

"Well, miss, you've no doubt but you look real handsome in black; but the other ladies—they will be so gay—and you—"

"I shall be graver than any of them, and greater contented. My dress is simple, and my manners are simple; and I shall be contented with my own dress and my own manners."

CURZON'S BAD FIST.

Lord Curzon, when a young man at college, once found his bad handwriting stood him in good stead. Writing two letters, one to a relative, the other to a chum, he enclosed them in the wrong envelopes. It chanced that in the second letter he had made some complimentary reference to his relative, and on discovering the mistake he had made he awaited developments with anxiety.

There presently came a letter from the uncle. "I have tried hard to decipher your epistle," it ran, "but your writing is so atrocious that I cannot make head nor tail of it. However, I guess the drift of it to be that you need some money, you rogue, so I enclose a check."

MICROBES BUSIEST TIME.

Make the Greatest Trouble at Nine and Nine.

A celebrated scientist has made the interesting announcement that there are more microbes in the air at nine o'clock in the morning and at nine o'clock at night than during any other periods of the day. He has also discovered that the percentage of microbes in the atmosphere is less at three o'clock in the morning and three o'clock in the afternoon than at any other times. The explanation advanced for the percentage of the microbes for nine o'clock a.m. and p.m. is that the movements of people. From five to nine in the morning they are going from their homes to their working places, and from five to nine in the evening they are again journeying through the streets, either homeward bound or in search of pleasure.

He noted that at or about six o'clock every morning and evening there were indications of the approach of the microbes "rush" hour. From that time on until nine o'clock the atmosphere became more and more crowded with germs of all kinds, some bad, some good; and then, immediately after nine o'clock, the tide began to ebb, until it was always lowest around about three o'clock. According to his researches, after lunch is the safest time for a nap.
