For the keen young man eager to see the world few things offer better opportunities than the cable service. So far, my most exciting past has been the last—the island of Rodrigues, in the Indian Ocean, where the cable to Australia comes up "to breathe."

As Battle's Eight Went Out.
However, in the half-light of a lovely Indian night, I talked and talked to them, and after a couple of hours, persuaded them to go home.

When morning came they were not nearly so ferocious, and we didn't need guns, after all. But the magistrate never thanked me for saving his life, and I am perfectly certain that I did.

Electricity versus Cyclones.
It was really not unpleasant living there. But the cyclones were appalling. One came soon after I landed, while my house was being erected. It took the new iron roof off as though it were paper, and for weeks after we were picking up bits

BEWARE OF THE CYCLONES
EXCITING TIMES ON A BRITISH CABLE ISLAND.
Island of Rodrigues, in the Indian Ocean, Is a Lovely Place.

of iron roof all over the island. When we saw clouds like fine tufts of wool flying across the sky, and heard the dull roaring of the wind, we called immediately to our men, "Ware cyclone!"

Electricity beats the wind! The natives know all about cyclones from long experience. Accordingly, they build their houses on the level of the ground. Then the cyclone simply blows the houses over, and does not do any damage. You see, they don't go in for china ornaments in Rodrigues.
