Memorial poetry, 10 cents a line. All correspondence intended for the Native of Hayti Call It "The Gouffre."

Earthquake sounds have been variously described and might be expected to differ widely according to circumstances and locality. The island of Hayti, which is situated in a neighborhood where the earth is in a continual state of tremor, is visited by a peculiar earthquake sound which is locally called the "gouffre," and an account of it appears in the Bulletin of the Seismological Observatory.

The region of the "gouffre" is in the mountain range of La Selle which is about seven thousand feet high, and which is unstable still.

much evidence of past volcanic activity. The sounds are apparently the same as those accompanying noticeable earthquakes, and the name "gouffre" is applied to the Port au Prince meteorological observatory.

This noise extends sometimes over series of weeks and the vicar of six to eight bouquets, fifteen miles north of the mountain range, give the following description of it:

During the day the sound was heard from the south-east, and seemed to come from a great depth, it being like the howling of a dog, but when it stopped with a gunshot, which might be taken at a distance.

During the night it was different, although the sound came from different direction; there was a constant rumbling of thunder, howling and a sound like the puffing of a strong wind. The gas in the wind, however, sometimes hearing all the noises at once, generally and above all, from 7 to 10 o'clock at night, the sound ended in a loud detonation much brighter than in the day, following a long echo. Then again would be heard an outburst that could not be imagined. It was as if a number of glass were shattered and the glass exploded in all directions. At times it seemed as if one could hear the roar of surf, or even the dead and of objects falling down, such as blocks of stone rolling down predicted.

If a idea is punished for doing nothing he should know better next time, and if he is wise, there will ever be a next time.
