TEARS ARE OUT OF STYLE.
Emotion Must Now be Expressed in a More Subtle Way.

One of the most conspicuous features of modern life is the change in the expression of emotion. There seems to be no doubt that the time will come when all the crude methods—the tears, the downcast eyes, the outbursts of passionate anger, the broken voice—will disappear entirely.

Though women are still inclined to cling to the old methods, men have already learned to express feeling more subtly. Something of the progress can be judged from a comparison between the present day and, say, the sixteenth century.

We know, for example, that Henry VIII. constantly burst into tears; that when the Duke of Anjou was being pressed to marry Elizabeth he wept to his cabinet and bestowed half a day in shedding tears; that when the funeral sermon was being preached on the Regent Murray of Scotland "there was not a man in all that iron crowd but was in tears," and that when James I. was angry he "wept like a fresh-beaten babe." If kings and princes could show their feelings so crudely, it is quite certain that the people had no more subtle.

What a change to-day! Emotion must be subtle now or nothing. Women may still weep a little, but men must do nothing more obvious than light a cigarette or go out for a game of golf. In the old days a man in tears was an ordinary thing, but now he is looked at askance, and blamed, as an actor is blamed for forgetting his part.

Watch a man at a theatre when a woman on the stage bursts into tears. He is uncomfortable, and looks away—not because he resents so clumsily an expression of feeling. He wants to have his emotions touched, but these tears and these sobs do nothing for him. Even the gallery feels more inclined to laugh than to weep in sympathy. But every one knows how a subtle suggestion of grief by a clever actress will give the whole audience a lump in the throat.

Novels, too, are no longer wet with the tears of their heroines. Authors recognize that the old symptoms of emotion are no use, their heroine must be dry-eyed and bewildered. She must not show her feelings in the old obvious, elementary way. She must not blush. She must not swoon. Above all, she must not burst into tears.

SCHOOLS IN CHINA.

Students Boss the Teachers and Study as They Please.

Some years have elapsed since the Manchou Government announced a programme of educational reform for China, having for its object the introduction of a national system of education approximating as closely as possible to that adopted by the western nations. This programme has not been carried out in its entirety, and its ultimate success must remain doubtful until a genuine attempt is made to introduce and enforce strict discipline in all state schools and colleges. The laxity of the present cannot be better described than in the words of a Chinese professor who, in the course of an address to the students of Fochow College, in October, 1910, said:

"The ignorant idea of liberty was encouraged under the management of directors who themselves have never had discipline. The students found the best place to experiment in regard to equality of which they had learned in Japanese books, was either with their parents at home or with their teachers at school. While in school the teachers are considered by the students to be their equals, if not inferiors; for, in fact, they have often been styled public servants. Cases of friction between the teachers and the students, ending in strikes on the part of the latter, are very often reported in the newspapers. With the unions formed in schools the students become absolutely lawless. The positions of the teachers as well as those of the directors lie in the hands of the students, who, in fact, form the moving spirit of the whole institution. With the presumptuous power acquired from the union which they have formed, the students, through the medium of the directors (the president of the college), instruct the teachers and the best methods of teaching and formulating examination questions."

The fools are not all dead, in fact, lots of them haven't been born yet.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

Evelyn sprung from the sofa and stood before him with clasped hands and burning eyes. "How could you do this to me? How could you do this to me?" she said, her voice breaking.

"Am I mad or—dreaming, Percy? Are you saying anything false, or are you telling me you have learned to love some one else?" she asked, hoarsely.

"It is so, Evelyn," he admitted, frankly. "You will never know how I struggled against this love that has come into my heart. I knew I was pledged to you, yet I was powerless to thrust from my heart the new love that had crept into it. Pray forgive me for causing you one heart-ache, but must tell you, I love another as dearly as you love me."

"At all this time, as my betrothed loved me, I have trusted and believed in you, and worshipped you as the very soul of honor and truth, with the honest conviction that over fell from human lips—a laugh that made the blood run cold in his veins."

"A distressed look broke over his handsome face. He reached out and laid his hand on her shoulder. "I have been more honorable than some men would have been in such a case," he said.

"You have not," she said, her eyes flashing. "You have not been more honorable than I should have been if I had known you were so true to me."

"I have been more honorable than I should have been if I had known you were so true to me," he said.

SCENE OF DREAMS.

Memories of Past Experience of the Individual.

In many cases where the incidents of a dream seem to be entirely unfamiliar it has been shown by a further investigation that they correspond to actually experienced events that have escaped the memory of the waking self. Delboef records an interesting example of this.

In 1862 he dreamed that he found two lizards in the snow. He took them up, warmed them, and reared them in a hole in a wall. He knew they were small lizards, which he called them "lizards." Now out of the fern seemed in his dreams to be Asplenium putu marula. In his dream he saw two other lizards come and eat the remains of the fern, and then a whole host of lizards coming to the wall in a long procession which covered the entire street. On waking he could not remember ever to have heard the name of the fern of his dream, although he discovered that a fern called Asplenium putu marula existed. Sixteen years later, however, he happened to be turning over the pages of a friend's Latin book across the very fern, with the Latin name written underneath in his own handwriting. He then remembered that in 1860, two years before the dream, he had met the sister of his friend, and to please her had written the Latin names under the various plants in her album at the direction of a botanist.

"Can you lick Kelly?"
"Does he believe in arbitration?"
"He does."
"I kin."

A SAFE ANSWER.

Transferred.
He told his shy maid of his love,
The color left her cheeks,
But on the shoulder of his coat
It showed for several weeks.

Black, Green and Mixed.

Rice Croquettes.—Wash the rice, boil and strain it. Use one cup rice, one-half cup sweet milk, one tablespoon sugar, one teaspoon butter. Simmer gently in a saucepan over the fire, stirring until the rice has absorbed the milk. When slightly cooled flavor with one-half teaspoon of lemon or vanilla extract. Add the white of one egg (unbeaten); fry in hot grease, dropping in a spoonful at a time. Drain on cheesecloth and roll in pulverized sugar.

Tomato Bisque.—Make a tomato soup, from two cups celery stock, two cups of cooked tomato, one teaspoon of sugar. Simmer an hour and run through a sieve. Cook together one tablespoon of butter, two tablespoons of flour. Add the tomato soup, simmer five minutes. Add one cup of sweet cream and a pinch of salt. Serve at once.

Lemon Jelly.—To one-third box gelatin add one cup cold water, one cup hot water, one-half cup lemon juice, one teaspoon lemon extract, two cups sugar. Stir till dissolved. Set on ice till jellied and cold.

Scalloped Fish.—Cut fish in small pieces free from skin and bones. Use cold cooked fish. Chop cold-boiled eggs and potatoes in alternate layers. Fill a buttered baking dish three-quarters full of this material, alternating fish, potato and egg. Cover with white sauce, sprinkle with breadcrumbs and bake twenty or twenty-five minutes in moderate oven.

White Sauce.—Cook together and mix one tablespoon butter and one teaspoon flour. Add one cup sweet cream, simmer five minutes and season.

Onion and Tomato Salad.—Take half a dozen firm ripe tomatoes of medium size, wipe them with a wet towel and cut them into slices a quarter of an inch thick. Peel a medium sized onion (Spanish or Bermuda) and slice very thin. Arrange the sliced onion and tomato in layers in the salad bowl and pour over them a mixture of dressing made by mixing together one large cupful of salad oil, two tablespoonfuls of vinegar, a half teaspoonful of salt, and a half teaspoonful of pepper. Use this salad as soon as possible. We should have said that young green onions may be used for this salad as well as the others.

Cold Meat and Potato Salad.—Cut a pound of cold cooked meat into thin slices and then into small squares, and mix with a pint of cold, chopped potatoes. Put a layer of this at the bottom of the salad bowl, cover with another layer of the meat mixture and another of the dressing, and continue till all the material is used. Place the bowl in the refrigerator for two hours or so, and the salad is ready for use.

Salad, Rouge et Blanc.—Take a close, firm red cabbage, trim off the outside leaves and cut into four pieces, wash in plenty of water, and move the stalks and ribs and cut the heart into shreds. Now cut a head of curly potato and mix them with the cabbage in a salad bowl, garnish with young green tops of celery over all, prepared as follows: Beat one egg and fix in gradually a teaspoonful of salad oil, a tablespoonful of vinegar and a half teaspoonful each of sugar and dry mustard. Season with a little salt and serve.

Hints for the Home.

Potato balls which are sauted in butter after being boiled are delicious. They should be served with a generous sprinkling of minced parsley.

To clean a frying pan with fish or onion, boil out with water, then wash clean; then put it on the fire and shake a little oatmeal in.

To stop a door hinge from creaking rub it with a lead pencil.

Tartaric acid removes almost any iron rust blemishes, and is an excellent article for removing yellow marks.

When gilt frames or molding of rooms have specks of dirt from flies they be cleaned with white of egg applied with a camel's hair brush.

Brans is much better to use for cleaning maffing than soap and water. Tie the bran in a bag, dip the bag into clean warm water, scrub the maffing briskly with this; then wash it off with a cloth wrung out of warm salt water. This method freshens it up wonderfully.

Should the knob come off a pan or kettle, a screw can be slipped through the hole with the lead protruding on one side. This knob will not get hot and can be replaced.
