with a great host of the public that are travelling by automobile.

They discourage the horse-keepers that may be thinking of locating.

The proper care of water along the highways is one of the secrets of permanent work. A road with simple gutters built with enough of slope so that the water will run off will last many years, while an imperfectly drained road goes to pieces in a hard shower or under the storms and frosts of winter.

The time has come when an scientific patching of country roads ought to cease. The farmer needs a good road a great deal more than the pleasure driving automobiles. To the latter a hard road means simply a little less confort. To the former it means many hours of wasted time while he drives his team through the stomachs of mud. It means that he must keep more horses and that his beasts of burden will wear out quicker. Let every farmer insist that the road officials of his neighborhood adopt modern scientific work.—Fanner's Advocate.

Kindness.

When your skies are as blue as a midsummer day,

And you're far on the road to success

When you haven't a care as you go on your way

It is easy enough to be kind and to the brother who's deep in disstress.

It is easy enough to be helpful to men

When you have good fortune, to share,

But the real man you'll find

Always thinks to be kind

And goes out of his way to assist others, when,

He, too, has a burden of care.

When you've money and comfort and all that you need,

And you're almost in reach of your goal,

A cry for assistance it's easy to heed

To pause on your way for the word or the deed

That may strengthen a poor brother's soul,

But greater is he, in the heat of the day

Who never forgets to be kind

To the weak and distressed

Although he is hard pressed,

And that he may answer a call by the way

Is willing to linger behind.

For kindness is not in the size of the gift.

And it isn't the flower of success;

The humblest of us has the power

To shift

The weight of a burden and offer a lift

To others whose fortunes are less

And though rough and rugged today be our way,

We haven't the right to be blind

To others in need;

If we come to the end of our journey and say,

We are failures indeed,

We didn't have time to be kind.

Hon. Adam Beck to Rest

Hon. Adam Beck is confined to his residence, suffering from a severe cold.

For the last few months the member from London had been devoting himself practically every minute of his time to legislative duties, and he has spent many hours in the public service when he should have been sleeping. He has been warned against doing so much work, but warnings have failed to induce him to conserve his strength.

A long rest has been ordered by Mr. Beck's physician. This month he will sail for England and the continent.

Would Torture Love, Then Hang Him

(Owen Sound Sun)

It is well for Henry Love that he is not at the mercy of at least one reader of The Sun who writes this week over the pseudonym of "A Subscriber." While The Sun makes it a rule to publish no letters unless the name and address of the writer is given, not necessarily for publication, we give some extracts from "A Subscriber's" letter as an expression of sentiment which is equalled to the love case "I saw a piece in The Sun, 'Should Love Hang,' says the letter: 'Well, I think hanging would be too easy a death for him; torture him to death, and then hang him'—(horrors!)—'For I firmly believe he is the man who does the murder and I believe there are more like 'em' (now, men, look but!) 'who would do the same if it were not for fear of their own necks. 'I know one man,' (and now the writer is getting down to the bone) 'right example to press her first statement' 'not many miles from here, who accuses his wife of over man that comes near the place, doctors and men that don't go near the place.' (This is not very clear but we will let it go.) 'He tortures her to death. 'We have known her for years and know that she is a good hardworking woman and has helped him. (The brute!) 'to make all he has and he has tortured her to death with his mad jealousy. 'We, her friends, know it to be true and she bears with him and carries the meals to bid to him when he takes his sulky fits.' (What a picture of domestic felicity!) 'What do you take women for? 'To be tortured to death by mad jealous beasts? Some women can't speak to a man but their husbands will throw it in their face. Hang Love, yes, hang him, for I guess he has been a street angel, too. Men can be very nice outside and so 'domestic' in their own home, some of them, as the one I refer to, for if you happen to call at his house, he will likely meet you with his prayer-book in his hand. 'This man is very anxious about Love.' (Kid-dered spirits, perhaps.) 'Please insert this in your paper.—A Subscriber.
