Hello, Central!

"Give me Mr. Jones. Hello, Jones, say, I want you to meet me at Thomas & Bassett's. I know you have a Karn Piano; how do you like it?" "Well, say, there is nothing better, and I will meet you at their store. My wife is going to buy a Sewing Machine, and we know they handle good goods. Yes, I am going to buy a Gasoline Engine from them, too. And say, they handle the Capital Separator, which is a winner, and if you want a Thrashing outfit they handle the goods you should have."

Having entered into a partnership business for Pianos, Organs, Sewing Machines, Cream Separators, Gasoline Engines, Thrashing Outfits, etc., with fair dealing we hope to get a good share of public patronage. Come and see us before buying.

Suspended Sentence For Bigamy.

I find that as this second marriage occurred in Toronto I have no jurisdiction in the matter and I allow you to go on suspended sentence, and anyone can deal with the case who likes," said his Worship Mr. B. B. Miller, of Warton, as he dismissed the case of James Wakefield, of Keppel, charged with bigamy. According to Wakefield's story he was a very much abused man and there are many who think he was. When only eighteen years of age he had been inveigled into marrying his first wife, and he went through the ceremony. He did not get along with her. She never cared for him, left him the following year and stayed away eight months. He took her back and tried to live happily together but could not succeed. He educated the family, they moved to Warton and he supported them, separated from them in 1905, and had given them $4 per week ever since, and extras. He had taken them to Cobalt and they would only stay three months, and it cost him $106. He had spent $164.84 in educating them at the hospital, had given them a free house and garden in Warton and now had given Christine Wakefield a mortgage for $1200 on his farm in Keppel and a clear deed of the house she lives in. After he had recited this story under oath, the Magistrate delivered sentence as stated above.
