Kindly to Dry Bread, and Make Wry Faces.

College are greatly astonished at the new rule, and a storm of protest has arisen from them. Why feast and luncheon on the breakfast table, and then go to the college to take dry bread, and there is a formal protest against making During the summer vacation the authorities at the college hauled up and burned them.

Young Folks

A Brave Little Boy.

Harry Parkes, a little boy who lived in a small house on the edge of a piece of woods away out in the country. There were neighbors in the neighborhood, but it was a lonely place, and Harry was a timid little boy. His school was a timid little place. One day he was on the other side of the woods on a cross road, and when Harry went through the woods morning and evening he ran all the way. He couldn't tell why he was afraid; there were no beasts in the woods, but still his heart was wild with all sorts of fearful thoughts.

One day, on a rainy night, when the wind was blowing a gale, Harry heard his mother calling him in a strange, hoarse voice from the other side of the woods, and he went to see what was the matter. He found his mother lying on the ground, and she was dead. Harry was so afraid that he ran away, and he never saw his mother again.

THE DETECTIVES OF LLOYDS

FRAUDS AND FAKES OF THE INSURANCE WORLD.

Instances of the Astuteness and Efficiency of These Men.

The secret service of Lloyd's does not advertise itself, yet it plays no small part in defeating the subtle machinations of the clever swindlers who, every now and again, try to cheat the great insurance companies. There are men and women now in prison who have reason to understand the astuteness and efficiency of Lloyd's detectives, says London Answere.

Lloyd's, as everyone knows, is a combination of the great insurance companies, and for them the necessity of corps of detectives is evident. They have their emissaries in every great city in the world. Sometimes they work hand-in-glove with official police detectives, as when the recent robbery of £100,000 pearl necklace took place. Sometimes they prefer their own methods.

Regaining Possession.

In London, Lloyd's secret-service men number half a dozen or less, and their chief is a Scotland Yard man. But their ultimate aim is rather different from that of the police. In these days of insurance almost every robbery is a matter of concern to Lloyd's. They are the people who pay. Consequently, if it becomes a matter of choice, they would rather regain possession of stolen goods, be they jewelry-gold pates, gems, or pictures, than have the thief caught and punished. Of course, if they could both arrest the thief and get the stolen articles back, well and good.

An ingenious fraud was recently revealed by one of their number. A Scotsman moving in good society bought a pearl necklace and insured it for £15,000. Of course, the necklace was examined by experts to make certain that it was of the declared value. But the lady had her plan all out and dried. She had a necklace made—an exact imitation, the value of which was probably only a pound or two—arranged to be sent by mail at 50 cents a box, six boxes for $2.50.

When the claim for £15,000 was put in the detectives were not altogether satisfied. To them it seemed strange that such a valuable necklace should be worn in the open street. The insurance company made a pretext in order to delay paying the claim, and inquiries were quickly made. Talking one day to a London jeweller, a detective was shown a necklace which he instantly recognized as the one supposed to have been stolen.

"Where did you get it?" he demanded.

"Oh, that was left here by a Mrs. Quim, who was, I suppose, hard up," answered the other.

The name given was different to that of the owner of the necklace, but the detective produced a photograph from his pocket.

"Is that the woman who sold it to you?" he asked.

The shopkeeper nodded.

Within five minutes the wires were at work, and the lady was under arrest. The coincidence that she could possess two pearl necklaces exactly alike was too remarkable. It turned out that her husband had played the part of the street thief, and at their trial both the conspirators were sent to penal servitude.

At 3.7 P.M.

In the office of a firm of assessors to Lloyd's near the Bank there reposed on a mantelpiece a partly-burned wooden clock, which brought a cunning rascal to goal.

This man had insured a country house and its contents for some thousands of pounds. Ultimately a letter reached the insurance company, stating that the place had been burned down, and preferring a claim. The letter was handed to the assessors, and, in company with a detective, a member of the firm went down to inspect the ruins.

The insured man's story was plausible enough. His family and servants had left for the holidays. He himself had stayed behind for a little to see the house locked up. When he left at a quarter to four everything was all right.

"H'm," said the detective. "What train did you catch?"

"The four-twenty-five. I left here at a quarter to four. I particularly noticed the time."

"And you're sure the house was not on fire when you left it?"

"Absolutely certain."

The secret-service man stepped gingerly across the ruins and picked up something.

"Did you see your time by your watch or a clock?" he asked.

"By the oak clock in the dining-room."

"This is an oak clock," said the detective. "And then significantly: 'It has stopped at seven minutes past three!'"

The clock was the main piece of evidence against the man who preferred his trial for attempted fraud.

Cases in which murder is suspected for the sake of insurance money are usually left entirely to the official police. But the more wily rogues invent opportunities, which permit them to chance getting the money without running the risk of the gallows.

In the Fire.

An instance of this sort occurred some years since. A man whom we will call Smith—which is not his true name—insured his life for a big sum in favor of his wife. A short time afterwards his house was burnt down, with Smith in it, according to the story of his bewailed widow.

Sure enough, among the ruins were found bones—the bones of a human being. Smith had been the 3rd night before, and he was gone. "What could be clearer?" a coroner jury held an inquest on the remains, and the widow applied for a settlement. But an idea struck one of the detectives. He had the bones examined by experts, who declared them to be those of an old skeleton. But Mrs. Smith was not easily daunted.

"You say my husband is not dead," she said to the representative of the company. "The coroner's jury said he was. If he is alive, prove it."

"She was quite calm and business-like."

Run to Earth.

The detectives, however, were not defeated. They took up their challenge, and began the search for the man they were convinced was alive. Sooner or later, they guessed, she would write to him, and, with that idea, they began to watch her correspondence. It did not prove difficult to adopt a ruse by which the letters she sent to post were scrutinized ere they were dropped in a pillar-box. They found that a Mr. Harris, a dealer in Jefferson. At last he called for the letters. One glimpse was enough to identify him, and in a few seconds he was handed over to the police. His wife joined him in a well-merited seclusion for a period of years.

There are scores of cases in which the secret service of Lloyd's is engaged of which the public never hear, for sometimes they may obtain evidence which will justify an insurance company in refusing to pay a claim, but would not justify a charge of fraud. But he is a clever swindler who baffles them on the rare occasions when all insurance company is duped.

THOUSANDS RECOMMEND "NERVILINE"

One of the most soul-distressing accidents that can befall one is a bad ankle or wrist sprain. I had only known of Nerviline earlier, but I have saved myself an enormous amount of pain and many agonizing nights of sleeplessness." Thus writes P. N. Quinn.

"I tumbled from a hay loft to the barn floor and sprained my right ankle and left wrist. They swelled rapidly and caused excruciating pains. It was not convenient to go to the city, and the liniment in the house was useless. When I got Nerviline relief came quickly. It took down the swelling, relieved the pain, and gave me wonderful comfort."

"I can recommend Nerviline for sprains, bruises, swellings, muscular pains, and sore back. I have proved it a sure cure in such cases."

"Think what it might some day mean to you to have right in your home, ready for an accident or emergency, a bottle or two of Nerviline. Get it to-day."

Coloring a Pipe.

How It Was Accomplished in Fifteen Days.

A European contemporary tells an entertaining story of how a pipe was colored. An artist, who had spent some years in Russia, received as a parting gift from the Czar (Nicholas I.) an enormous meerschaum mounted with diamonds.

"Noticing that the recipient was looking somewhat pensively at the gift, the Czar asked him what he was thinking about. The artist replied that he was thinking of the time it would take to color the pipe—probably five years."

Learning that the artist would not be leaving the country for fifteen days, the Czar took the pipe back again, and sent it to the palace guard-house, where the following "order of the day" was issued:

"Under pain of the knout none must smoke any other pipe than this. All the necessary tobacco will be supplied."

The Cossacks went cheerfully at the job day and night, and at the end of the fortnight the pipe was returned to its owner, inscribed:

"Colored in fifteen days by order of Nicholas, Emperor."

Couldn't Understand.

"I reduced my stomach measurement four inches by pushing a lawn mower."

"I can't understand why some people are so crazy to be slim."

Proof That Health and Renewed Vitality Quickly Return When Right Remedy is Used.

"I am only thirty years old, yet for almost two years I have felt more like seventy-five. I have found it difficult to sleep at night, and in the morning felt so dispirited and heavy that sleep was difficult. My hands were always clammy and perspiration on slight effort would break out all over me. It was not unnatural that I should begin to brood over the chance that I should be unable to do my work, and this dread made my sleepless nights perfect misery. After repeated trials of medicines and mixtures, Dr. Hamilton's Pills gave me the first gleam of hope. From the very first I could see they were different in action from other pills. They didn't gripe and acted as naturally as if nature and not the pills were cleansing my clogged-up system. My spirits rose. I felt 'oh better.' The sluggish action of the system gave way to normal activity. Dizziness and headaches ceased, appetite, good sleep and ambition to work returned, and have remained. I am like a new man, and I thank Dr. Hamilton's Pills for it all."

FISH BEARS ITS OWN LIGHT.

Peccoliar Species Has Been Found in Australian Bight.

A new species of fish having the appearance of an electrically lighted flashlight has been discovered in the Australian bight at the great depth of 850 fathoms.

This curious fish, which has 53 brilliant light organs on either side of its body, which itself shines like a mirror, has been named the tudor. It was hauled to the surface by the trawler Endeavor, and will be placed on exhibition at the Australian Museum at Sydney.

More than a hundred other entirely new varieties were obtained, all the specimens inhabiting these submarine depths being more or less luminous.

Several fish of a jet black color, with a skin like velvet studded all over with scintillating enrustations of bluish light, were also obtained, some being shaped like a pair of bellows.

Soon Discovered.

A man who had purchased a fine-looking horse soon discovered that the animal was blind, and after several weeks he succeeded in disposing of her, as the defect did not seem to lessen his speed or detract from her general appearance. The next day the new owner of the horse appeared. "Say, you know that mare you sold me?" he began.

"She's stone blind," I know it," replied her past owner, with an easy air. "You didn't say anything to me about it," said the purchaser, his face red with anger.

"Well, you see," replied the other, "the fellow who sold her to me didn't tell me about it, and I just concluded that he didn't want it known."

How a Deer Outwits Dogs.

Threw Dogs Off the Scent by Leaping Twenty-five Feet.

A certain sportsman once had an interesting opportunity to observe the means a hunted deer takes to outwit the dogs that are following hard upon his trail. The incident took place near the outlet of an Adirondack lake at a time when the outlet had been dammed, and the stream had overflowed the low land until it was more than half a mile wide. In a dead tree on the shore there was a platform, so that when the hounds drove a deer into this platform, a hunter stationed on the platform would have an easy shot at the game.

The sportsman was posted in this tree. He waited patiently for half an hour; at last he heard the dogs at a great distance. They were driving a deer toward the water. Hounds and quarry were coming fast, and the cry of the dogs grow louder and clearer every moment.

Presently a fine buck emerged with tremendous leaps from the forest. He was too far away for a shot, but near enough so that his movements could be easily watched. With a few leaps he cleared the open space between the trees and the water, and made a great bound into the outlet. He covered at least twenty-five feet in the last leap, so that there was a space of several yards between his last tracks and the margin of the water quite without scent.

As he struck, the water splashed up about him in a shower of spray. Then the sportsman saw him making all the speed he could, not for the opposite bank, but straight up the outlet, parallel to the shore. His forefeet and legs threw the water into the air like the prow of a small steamer. He carried his huge antlers proudly.

He splashed through the water for perhaps a hundred yards, then turned and waded quickly back to the shore he had left. In another moment he had galloped away into the forest.

All this time the hunter could hear the dogs in full cry, but the buck had been out of sight a minute or more before they burst out of the woods on his trail. They rushed along with their noses to the ground until they reached the spot where the buck had gathered himself for his great leap into the water.

Then they showed plainly their discomfiture. Up and down the outlet they ran excitedly, their
