The Great Elm.

Of all the trees that Billy knew he very tallest was the great elm in the meadow-lot near the river, He heard that the spire of the new church at the village was more than a hundred feet tall, and he felt sure that his tree was taller than that.

One day Billy and his cousin Ro pert were playing in the merdow. They sat down to rest for a min-ute in the shade of the great clm. "I wish that I could find out how tall this tree really is," said Billy. "Why; that is easy enough," said Hubert.

They ran to the barn, where Ropert picked out a small pole from a pile of lumber. With a foot rule which Billy brought from the house, they found that the pole measured almost exactly ten feet n length. Taking both the pole and the foot rule, they hurried back to the meadow. "Now you sit down and watch me, said Robert. He stuck the pole into the ground not far from the elm, but outside the place where its great shadow Then he carefully measured the hadow that was cast by the pole, and with equal care measured the distance from the base of the tree o the end of the shadow cast by ts topmost branches. Your elm is one hundred and

There could be nothing easier." The said his cousin. The pole is ten-feet tall, and I found that its shadow is just five feet in length, Now that means that it takes two feet of the pole, with the sun where it is now, to east a foot of shadow ig tim. Of course it is the same with the and he tree. I found that the length of anding This means that the tree itself is before twice sixty-four feet, or one hundred and twenty-eight feet high. Do you see? That is the way our toacher had us find out the height our flagpole."

Billy was quick enough to under stand, and before another day he passed he had measured the heigh of a score of trees in the meads and near the house .- Youth's Companion.

An especially noteworthy one, performed upon an Alabama negro boy in 1902, illustrates the resources of modern heart surgery. This boy had been the victim of a stab wound. The knife had penetrated the apex of the heart and passed into the left ventricle, making a wound nearly half an inch long. When the boy was placed on the operating table, in a little negro cabin, the signs of death had already appeared. His feet were cold, his face showed signs of the utmost distress. The surgeons made a little window-like opening just above the heart. Through this they could readily see the injured organ, the blood spurting from the wound at each pulsation. One surgeon put in his hand, pulled the heart upward and held it while another sewed the wound with catgut. The operation—your spirits, but is apt to lead you into mistakes which you would not make in bright weather. It is well known in banks that errors in figures are far mor efrekquent on dull days than on fine, and school teachers have observed the same thing. A warm, bright day is the best for mental effort, but it is also the worst for crime. There are more convictions for assault with vioence during the warm weather than during the winter—a fact that s probably due to the misapplica tion of the energy which the fine days bring to all of us. When the weather becomes very hot, on the other hand, the effect is depressing, and there is a marked decrease in rimes of violenc, with a falling off lso in th output of sound mental work-another illustration of the law of compensation.

True and Brave Women.

To be able to look cheerfully and bravely through clouds of poverty and distress is an accomplishment bestowed by nature upon every true and brave woman; and, no matter how poor and humble her home may be, the magic powers of smiles can brighten its shadows and lighten its cares. Upon the troubled mind of a feeling husband a wife's smile falls like a sunbcam on a flower. And how much more beautiful it makes the face that wears it than a frown? When a wife and mother forgetting sorrows and hardships, smiles away her tears there is a loveliness in the act that speaks to a man's heart more cloquently than words.
