Her Great Love;

Or, A Struggle For a Heart

Ho had got a check of Mershon's in his nocket. But don't think the worse of Bobby for this. Youth is youth, and Decima had played her part so well that he was firply convinced she had accepted Mershon'of her own free will

The days passed. Mershon came over to The Woodbines every afternoon. Sometimes he remained to dinner. Nothing succeeds like success, and just at this time Mr. Mershon was at his best for one thing, he was very careful. He did not claim any of the privileges which selong to the engaged man. Nothing succeeds like success, and just at this time Mr. Mershon was at his best, for one thing, he was very careful. He did not claims any of the privileges which belong to the engaged man. Something told him that if he had attempted to kies Decima, she would have revolted and he would have lost her: so atthough he was as attentive as the most exacting mistress, could have desired, he held himself in check, and refrained from any caress, lie intended to accustom Decima to his presence and her position as his affianced wite. What his restraint cost him he alone could, tell.

wide-open eyes fixed upon the cider woman.

"Are, you beginning to understand?" said Mrs. Sherborne. "And do you think that I am mistaken, that what I say is not true?" My dear, it is—it is! I know, because I have been through it. You will be the elave, and he will be the master. And you think he will not soon find out how much you dislike him? Scon, very soon, he will learn the truth, will discover that you hate him, that you will never love him, that the loathing for him will grow more intended ay by day for as long as you both live."

"Ob, what are you shving? Do not say any more!" came from Decice white lipe, A faint gleam of the knowledge of the truth was breaking in upon her.

"I must—I must!" stid Mrs. Sherborne, as if in desperation. And then when he finds this, out for himself, do you know what will happen? She paused, drew a long breath, and looked round the room as if she were afraid of being overheard. "He is all kindness and mostleness now. BRAVO! YSAYE!

An amusing story is related about Ysaye, the famous violinist, by the Ttaile Belge. During his visit to America the artiste was the guest of a New York millionaire who in his early days was a shoemaker.

After dinner his host importuned Ysaye to play, and when he hesiremarked: "A man should never be aslfamed of his art. Thereupon Ysaye played to his
