It is not generally known, however, that to brain workers and to those whose work demands concentration of their thinking powers there is no bigger nerve feeder than the humble egg. Scientists aver that a chemical substance called lecithin is vitally important to the life of the nerve centres. It is the undue expenditure of this substance that causes brain-fag and general nervous collapse. Many nerve specialists prescribe legithin to their patients, the dose being fifteen grain day in all. The yoke of an aver age sized egg contains sixteen grains of lecithin, so that one egg eaten every day contains sufficient
