A Foolish Young Man;
Or, the Belle of the Season.

CHAPTER I.—(Continued.)
"You didn't tell me that," he said, looking at her with a surprised expression. "How could you do that?"

top, and Stafford's admiration was swelled up in a moment when he saw that the rider was a young girl, that she was riding with a steady hand and an easy seat, and that she was as much at ease among the trees as if she were trotting in Rotten Row.

As she came nearer admiration compelled him to admit that the girl was a young one—she looked like the average school-girl of the day, and the most beautiful faces Stafford had ever seen. She was dark but the cheeks were a lovely pink, her hair was black but soft and silky, and her eyes were a clear, deep blue. Her dress was simple and unassuming, but she had a staid and womanly bearing which was most impressive.

A poet would instantly have thought that it was a vision of the Spirit of the Mountains, and he would have been so impressed by the scene which was now unfolding on the valley that he would have been unable to do anything but gaze at her with a rapt attention. He saw her dark eyes flashed round upon him, and he saw her smile as she looked at him with a steady gaze.

Stafford felt that something had happened to him, but he did not know what it was. He felt as if he had been struck by a bolt of lightning, and he felt as if he had been awakened from a deep sleep. He felt as if he had been given a new lease of life, and he felt as if he had been given a new purpose in life.

But Stafford was not a poet, and he did not have a poet's imagination. He was a practical man, and he was a man of action. He was a man who was used to seeing things as they were, and he was a man who was used to doing things as they should be done.

But in a moment or two the sportsman's instinct woke in him a fish-rising instinct, and he found himself pulling the horse up and looking at her with a surprised expression. "How could you do that?"

It seemed to him impossible that the girl should avoid a false step, or that she should avoid a false step, or that she should avoid a false step.

THOSE LONG LENTEN DAYS
TELLING OF THE SEASON OF SELF-DENIAL.

Some quaint interpretations of Lenten Duties Among Rural Parishes.

In many an out-of-the-world village, where things, under "old parson" have been very quiet for half a century or more, there comes a new person, with a new broom, which, possibly, he may wield too vigorously, says London Answers.

When Lent looms near he—dealing with his own flock, of course—will talk and preach enthusiastically about Lent and its duties, and it's not unlikely he'll get some sort of a response, even if it isn't exactly what he intended or expected.

One at a Time.
I had preached about Lent: self-denial, fasting, giving up things, and so on. Most particularly I had emphasized the point that Lent is the time of all times to learn to say "No." In the week I met an old villager, and jokingly talked him up to what he was going to give up.

"What he I going to give up?" I he going to give up comin' to church till you come more sensible-like!"
"I've overtook a ploughman homeward plodding his weary way, and observed that he wasn't smoking."
"Given up your pipe for Lent, George?" I inquired.
"No-o-o!"—with surprised indignation. "Got no 'baccy, parson! Excuse me making so bold, but I suppose—" And he waited suggestively.

Why coal and coke? Well, you see, being young and inexperienced, I labelled the box, "FOR THE NEW STOVE."
Stoves burn coal and coke, and there are wags even in a country village!

CAUSE OF THUNDER.
It is Thought that Thunder is Due to Intense Heating of Gases.
For a long time it was supposed that the noise of thunder was caused by the closing up of the vacuum created by the passage of the lightning, the air rushing in from all sides with a clap; but the intensity of the noise is rather disproportionate, and it is now thought that thunder is due to the intense heating of gases, especially the gas of water vapor along the line of electric discharge, and the consequent conversion of suspended moisture into steam at enormous pressure. In this way the crackle with which it begins is followed by a peal of thunder, sometimes begins to be regarded as the sound of steam explosion in a small scale caused by discharges before the main flash. The rumble would be the overlapping steam explosions, and the final clap, which sounds loudest, would be the steam explosion nearest to the auditor. In the case of rumbling thunder the lightning is passing from cloud to cloud. When the flash passes from the clouds to the earth the clap is loudest at the beginning. One investigator has given substance to these suppositions by causing electric flashes to pass from point to point through terminals clothed in soaked coarse wool, and he succeeded in magnifying the crack of the electric spark to a startling extent. It is quite possible that further experiments will add to his findings.

THE RULING PASSION.
The Business Instinct Uppermost in a Perilous Situation.
It is not hard to keep from being fleeced if you are only sufficiently in earnest about it. In an article in the Wide World Magazine, Mr. Malcolm Savage Trencher tells the story of a German mountain climber who did not forget to be economical, even in the midst of deadly peril.
A party was crossing a glacier on the slope of Mont Blanc when one of the travellers called to the others to stop and listen. Strange cries came from the ice beneath their feet.
"Some one has fallen into an crevasse," exclaimed one of the party. "His groans seem to indicate that he is already beyond help."
"We must do what we can, in any case," responded one of the guides; and he began a long and perilous descent into what proved to be the bottom of a concealed crevasse. At the bottom they found the poor

Spring BLOOD IS WATERY BLOOD
How to Get New Health and New Strength at This Season
Spring ailments are not imaginary. Even the most robust find that the winter months most trying to their health. Confined indoors, often in over-heated, and nearly airless, rooms, in the schools, taxes the vitality of even the strongest. The blood becomes thin and watery and is clogged with impurities. Some people have headaches and a feeling of languor. Others are low-spirited and nervous. Still others are troubled with disfiguring pimples and eruptions, while some get up in the morning feeling just as if they had been up all night. These are all signs of a diseased blood, and it is out of order and that a medicine is needed. Many people take purgative medicines in the spring, but this is a serious mistake. It only causes yourself a new ailment, and it does not cure the disease. The only way to get new health and new strength at this season is to take a course of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. These Pills are the only medicine that will cure the blood, and they are the only medicine that will cure the blood. They are the only medicine that will cure the blood, and they are the only medicine that will cure the blood.
