GAUGING NERVOUS POWERS OF MODERN FLYING MAN.

Cold Baths and Careful Life Are-Precautions Taken to Retain Nerve.

I have now looped the loop over one hundred times, and mean go on practising the feat until have carried out my thousandth loop, which total I hope to reach in a year or so, writes B. C. Hucks, n London Answers.

Many people shake their heads quefully when I tell them of my in. tentions, for they prophecy that my nerve will never stand the terinclin. What and need in spring rible strain of whirling my machine about in the clouds week after week victions are further strengthened when they learn that I am undergoing no special training for my upside-down flights.

Only Cold Baths.

But I am very confident that I' of my becoming a physical wreak with a bunch of leaves by way of was aligned to wait across the floor At the same time, I do not want to make light of the tremendous resignation; that of a boy with fanerve-strain which looping the loop and figure 1 began taking Dr. and upside down flying entail. I fully realize that unless I keep in house an back to good the pink of condition my nerve will hath and more I am as well as go. So every morning, no matter how low the temperature may be, I have a cold bath, but, beyond and twenty neckbands which are leading a moderately careful life, I considered a good price for a wife my nerve. ..

As a matter of fact, it is not always continual flying that. wears for a bride. away an airman's nerve. More often it is a sudden shock, or moment of deadly peril when he stares four feet high, built of pliant sap death in the face, which destroys lings driven into the soil and his confidence for ever.

I could name several flyers whose however, they are placed by themnerve was absolutely ruined by one selves in a but about the size of a particularly bad smash or exceptionally narrow escape from death. I have never been superstitious, and am one of the few airmen who do not go in for mascots. Somebody recently tied a doll on my monoplane and I took it aloft and looped the loop-certainly the only mascot that his participated in an unsidedown flight.

It is the little things in flying which try our nerves most. For instance, when starting out for a flight I have many pritable, and anxious moments when waiting for the engine to start up— a feeling of wanting to "get on with the business" as scon as possible.

Afraid of a Pencil.

I remember, some short time back, that the people who used to flock round my aeroplane after an whibition flight would often whip out pencils and write their names on the wings of the machine. Whether the points of their penils had penetrated the fabric and started a little tear that would grow to a dangerous size used to worry me no end, and those signatures used to worry me far more han the likelihood of my machine blowing up in mid-air during my bomb-dropping experiments. Apart from technical skill, th airman's self-confidence is his greatest asset. It is even more—it is his very life.

) If I once began to feel the faintest shadow of reason for believing that my nerve was going, I suppose I should have to give up flying. But whether I should do so even then is another matter. Flying is a sport that, once mastered, is hard to abandon.
