AN AMERICAN AUTHOR TELLS THE AUSTRIAN SOLDIERS ARE WHAT HE HEARD.

the Men Who Know Most About the Ruined City.

Only a year and a half ago I had gone down from Brussels in company with a young American student, writes Mr. Barnes, the New York author and editor. I saw Louain as it was then; as it had been for over six hundred years; as it will hever be again. And it was Sunday, the 13th of September, of this year of disgrace, 1914, that I at in the little front parlor of the house of Mgr. Deploige, president of the Superior Institute of Philob sophy of the University of Louvaing Seated at the table were Prof. Leon Verlest and Prof. Alfred Nerincx, acting Burgomaster of Louvain, and by the irony of circumstances also professor of international law in this second oldest university of Europe. The speaker's English was digton then, and his words forcible and well chosen.

"It was all so unexpected," he 'so frightfully astonishing, said this destruction of our city and the murder of our people Even to us, it is hard to understand and to be lieve it.

The First Shot.

For eight days the Germans had lived here in the town, We had is it? I am a blameless man. I have treated them well; they had eaten much of our food and partaken are a very friendly people. Yet we much of our wine There was no are all called away from our familbeer left; that had all gone in the les and sent over here to attack first three days.

The streets were quiet; our own bourgeois police patrolled the streets in the daytime, but were not allowed to be on duty after 7 o'clock in the evening. There was no proper provost guard, although the Germans claimed to have established such. "On Tuesday, the 25th of August, at $10 a.m., the dreadful thing beman soldiers had come in and had been well received; they seemed to be under no command, but wandered about collecting food."

The professor paused. "Here is the gentleman who can ell you the story of the first shot. He indicated Prof. Leon Verlest, ender, handsome | man, with pointed beard.

was from his house, No. Rue Leopold, that it took place There is nothing but the walls left now it is but a step from here; we can show you the very window. Let him tell you how it began," Speaking French, but in the very quietest and calmest way Prof.

Verlest began his story! "We were seated at the table at dinner, my wife and I; a German officer, a captain of the Landwehr, be realize who was quartered with us. Suddenly an alarm sounded, and there was much running into the street. A man ran by, shouting in German. The officer rose, and, buckling on his sword and revolver, went out. We closed the door and my wife and I stood in the hall. We thought perhaps our troops were coming, but we did not know.

The Russians, on the Contrary, Accept Their Lot! With special correspondent of The Lordon Times at Lwow (Lemberg). writes: I am more and more impressed daily with the complacence with which the Russian soldiers accept their lot. There is no doubt that they have been deeply stirred by this war, and, though they bemoan the misery that it has brought nearly all seem to accept it as something that had to be. It is certain; that they hate the Germans and are fighting willingly. But the case of the Austrians is quite different. I talked a long time with a young Austrian reservist who has been lying now for weeks with a desperate wound through the body.
