

The Lady of Lancaster;

Or, Leonora West's Love.

CHAPTER XI.—(Continued).

No; her mother was an American; you know that. The Americans—no claim to nobility here. But I have no such caste distinctions as we do. Miss West bears a patent of nobility in her face.

"Dare she not, the little darling? What a sweet good nature she has! And after all, laureates who care?"

"However it be, it seems to me,

Kind hearts are too good."

And simple faith than Norman blood.

"Yes! I think you will find it hard to bring the rest of the world to subscribe to Tennyson's verse," Lancaster said.

"They will, I am sure, if I shall please myself if I can make them understand me better. I dare not, however, tell them all about my past life, for I have not told even my old fellow, for I make Mrs. Weston the young soldier."

"You are the architect of my destiny," Enviable yellow grumbled Lancaster.

"I never knew what luck I had," he said, "but I must now agree with Do Vere. I was fortunate for me that I had a bachelor left me when he died, and he left me his fortune when he died, and I can more in good society educated, I know Latin and French, and German, and I have studied music. In America I can move in quite good society, and I have a good education, and fixed her clear, grave eyes on her face.

"Well!" Lancaster said dryly, "I am sure you are but thinking in contrast what a dud I am!" exclaimed Do Vere suddenly.

"Here I am talking so much about my choice, when I do not even know if she is fit for me!"

"Do you think about her?" Do Vere asked.

"I do," Lancaster said.

"Then it is likely I shall love England," he said.

"No; I am quite too fond of her for that. Oh, I first say are you a knight or a dragon? Lancaster. You are born of dragon blood, I have known a long time of your proneness," Lancaster said.

"I am not," Do Vere said.

"Because they are quite secondary to your more solid recommendations," Do Vere said.

"And after all you have not said what you think about my choice," said Miss Weston.

"I do not know what to say, because I do not understand her, and I have not been very near her, as I know she could not be near me," Lancaster said.

"What was your choice?" Do Vere asked.

"I have the same," Do Vere said.
